The woman said she had eaten nothing to speak of for several days. She had been an inmate at the poor farm, but while there had refused all food except what was forced upon her, because she did not wish to be considered an object of charity.

She was immediately given a cup of coffee and some rolls and a blanket was obtained at the Y. W. C. A., so that she could lie down on one of the benches in the waiting room.

It developed that the aged woman's daughter, who is herself the mother of nine children, had taken her mother from the poor farm that morning, and had left her in the depot, while she went to consult an attorney on the question of recovering the custody of her children, who were now in the hands of the state. The daughter's intention was to take her mother and all the children to Maple, Wis., where the daughter has employment.

The whole family formerly lived at Duluth. While they were here, the daughter's husband died, and that threw upon the young mother the burden of providing for the nine children and their grandmother. The task was more than her strength was equal to, and she became ill. The grandmother was taken to the poor farm and the children became wards of the state.

The young mother, after recovering her health, obtained a steady situation at Maple, Wis. Yesterday morning she came to get her mother from the poor farm. The two went together to the depot, the daughter not knowing that the mother was in distress from lack of food, which she had persistently refused while at the almshouse.

Leaving her aged mother at the depot, the daughter went to consult an attorney about recovering charge of her children. She found this a much harder problem than she had expected, and was gone several hours. In the meantime the forlorn plight of the aged woman at the depot was discovered.

The aged woman and her daughter left on the evening train for Maple. After the necessary formalities have been complied with, the nine children will again be with their mother.

FARM SCHOOL TO BE UNIQUE

Duluth State Institution Will Be Divided Into Four Departments.

Homecroft Tracts of Five Acres Each Will Also Be Developed.

Plans are now practically complete for the new state agricultural school and experimental farm at Duluth. It is hoped to have everything in readiness to do full work in eighteen months, though it may be possible to give some service before that time. Dean Woods and Prof. Andrew Boss of the state agricultural school at St. Paul recently spent a few days in Duluth making final preparations, so that active work may be started at once on the preparations for buildings, fences and other equipment. The buildings will have dormitory facilities for those who may attend at the beginning, and as fast as applications warrant and the school grows, the legislature will be asked for additional school buildings and equipment.

The school was authorized by the last legislature and an appropriation of $65,000 was made for the purchase of land and equipment for the next two years. The farm, which consists of 240 acres, has been purchased at a cost of $12,000. The plans for the arrangement and development of the farms are mainly the work of Prof. Boss and it is thought that they will be adopted by the board of regents of the state university without material change.

The scheme provides for the division of the farm into four separate sections: (1) A dairy and stock farm of 160 acres, the stock to consist of dairy cows, sheep and swine. (2) A co-operative creamery, sanitary milk plant and home dairy. (3) A truck farm of ten acres, with greenhouse and hotbed equipment. (4) A twenty-acre combination poultry, orchard and small fruit farm. The remaining land is to be divided into from one to five-acre homecroft tracts, to be developed by families employed at the farm or elsewhere.

The five-acre homecroft tracts will be developed as family truck gardens, small fruit orchards or poultry farms, according to the inclination of those undertaking their development with a limited capital. The buildings are to be furnished by the state and each unit developed by a family without further aid than supervision and advice. The property is to remain in the possession of the state, but will remain the home of the one developing it, as long as his services are satisfactory. An interest charge of 5 per cent on the money invested in land and equipment will be collected as rental and the person operating the tract is to own all the produce grown on the place while he operates it.

RESENTS LETTER TO GEN. OROZCO

Mexican Government Takes Umbrage at Action of United States.

City of Mexico, April 18.—Mexico has replied to the warning note of Acting Secretary Huntington Wilson, declining to assume responsibility for Orozco's acts, denying the right of the Washington government to deliver the admonition contained therein, taking exception to the communication directed to Orozco through Consul Letcher, and deploring the making public of this communication in the same note to which the government was required to make answer.

The reply was made public by Minister of Foreign Relations Calero. It denies the right of the Washington government to admonish Mexico, for the reason that it is not based on any justifiable incident. It denies responsibility by the constituted government for acts committed in territory of rebellion, while accepting full responsibility for every loss or damage sustained by foreigners legally chargeable to the government.

A caution has been issued to leaders of the Federal forces to insure proper treatment of foreigners who may be taken as prisoners of war. At the same time it is asserted that no basis exists for supposing that any other course would be pursued.

Orozco is held to be answerable for his offenses only to the Mexican courts and therefore should not have been made the receipient of a diplomatic communication.

AMENDMENTS HIS SUBJECT

Dr. D. H. Day Talks on Initiative and Recall to Suffrage Club.

What Women, "Bless Their Hobble Skirted Hearts" Did in Seattle.

"DAYISMS."

"It was not possible to recall Gill, however, until the women of Seattle were allowed to vote. And when, a few months later, Gill ran again for mayor, it was the women's votes that saved the day for Seattle and for clean government. So chalk up one for the women, God bless their hobble-skirted, peach-basketed, high-heeled hearts."

"You see the unmarried men knew from experience that women are well qualified to rule; and the married men knew from experience that whether qualified or not, whether she votes or not, woman does rule anyway. A gazelle-eyed creature once said to me: 'Why should women be allowed to vote? What use would it be? You men, with your superior wisdom could make us believe your way of voting is the only right way, and we would all vote as you told us to.'"

Dr. D. H. Day was the principal speaker at a well-attended meeting in the council chambers at the city hall last evening under the auspices of the Women's Suffrage club. The initiative, referendum and recall was the subject of his discourse.

The speaker explained the meaning and purpose of the proposed amendment to the city charter. He heartily indorsed each of the three provisions and stated that there is strong opposition to the change. He said that opposition includes some of the aldermen, city officials representing big business, public service corporations and a certain class of standpat politicians and voters.

Dr. Day discussed the personnel of the council and he had no big bouquets for some of the city fathers. He also scored the legislature for its failure to further the cause of women's suffrage.

Dr. Mary McCoy, president of the club, spoke of the election which will be held May 7 to pass on the initiative, referendum and recall. She announced that Mayor McCuen had been expected to make a few remarks, but that he was evidently too busy organizing a baseball club to arrive early. When he failed to appear she said that he had probably received a sick call.

Mrs. Milton Fish told of the anger of the West end people that the patrol limits had been extended against their will. Miss Laura Frankenfield gave two readings which were heartily encored. It was determined to secure Miss Frankenfield to present an entertainment at the First Congregational church, May 10.

Dr. Day's speech was the principal one of the evening. Some extracts from it follow:

An Example.

"Suppose you and I, and the rest of the people of Duluth want a modern housing ordinance—or law—passed; a law that would compel all the cheap lodging houses and hotels to give their patrons—our friends, the lumberjacks and woodsmen, and dock-wallopers, and that large class of men who are so often, through lack of work—and other reasons—compelled to eat and sleep in the cheapest places they can find—to give those men, I say, a clean, sanitary place to sleep in. How do we go about it now?

"We go to our alderman and get him to introduce such an ordinance—or law. That's all we can do.

"If the hotel keepers and lodging house keepers, and saloon-keepers could convince a majority of the aldermen—in some way or other—that such a law was not needed; that it would only put an unnecessary expense on the hotel keepers, and benefit nobody, that would be the end of the matter. There would be nothing more that we could do. Our friends, the lumberjacks, would have to scratch along through the nights as they have always done.

"You see, it isn't hard to convince some aldermen on such matters. Some aldermen are always open to conviction—and sometimes they are convicted—I mean convinced.

"Under present conditions I say, that would end matters. The public—you and I and the rest of the people—could not nothing more.

"But if we had the initiative as part of our city charter—if we could initiate, or begin, the lawmaking process ourselves, then we would get some good lawyer, or professional man, like Bert Fesler, or Dick Cullen, or E. M. Morgan, to draw up such an ordinance as we ought to have, and we'd get the hotel men, and lodging house keepers and saloon men to meet with us, for they have a right to have a voice in the matter, and state their side of the case. The matter would be thrashed out thoroughly in a friendly manner, and when the ordinance was ready to go to the council, there wouldn't be any porcelain-lined bathtubs, or marble washstands in it; but there would be provisions made for a clean, decent place to sleep and a sanitary place to wash for the man with only a few cents in his pocket. Then, if the council refused to pass our law, we could put it up to the people themselves, to you, and to me, and if we passed it, no power on earth could veto it—except ourselves—and it would then become a law—our law.

"And that's the initiative. What do you think of it? On May 7, vote 'yes' on the amendment, and you'll have it.

"We've tried the old plan. We've given it a long, fair trial of over 100 years, and it has proven a failure, a farce, a pretense of real government. It has bred rottenness and corruption, both in politics and in business. It has built up an absolute control of our cities and states and nation by the money power.

"Let us try Lincoln's plan. He was one of the common people. He knew the wants, the desires, the needs of the people as no man of his time knew them.

"Let us try his plan—here, in Duluth."

"WIRELESS" IS RECENT.

First Message From Ship to Shore Sent Twelve Years Ago.

New York, April 18.—Just twelve years and five months had elapsed since the first wireless message was sent from a ship at sea when the other carried out the news of the Titanic's distress.

This first message was sent from the American liner St. Paul to the Needles on Nov. 15, 1899, as it was completing its fifty-second voyage across the Atlantic. A heavy fog wrapped the Isle of Wright when from the land station there this call began to go out at regular intervals:

"St. Paul! St. Paul!" At 2:45 p. m., when the fog had grown so dense that any observation of the liner would have been impossible, the answer came:

"Yes."

"Where?" when the second query.

"Sixty-six nautical miles out," was the reply, and from the interchange of messages that followed Vol. 1, No. 1, of the Trans-Atlantic Times was made up.

W. W. Brofield was its editor and H. H. McClure its managing editor.

To the layman this wireless telegraphy has only been assumed since Jack Binns sent out the call for assistance for the White Star liner Republic after its collision with the Florida off Nantucket on Jan. 23, 1909.

SENATORS MAY AGREE ON NEW TARIFF BILLS.

Washington, April 18. — Senator Cummins of Iowa, Progressive Republican, at a conference with the Democratic members of the finance committee, submitted his bill for the revision of the metal schedule of the tariff law. It provides for considerable reduction on iron and steel rates—about midway between the present tariff and the house Democratic bill—and the Democratic members said they felt that an agreement with Senator Cummins could be reached.

Senator Simmons of North Carolina, who will have charge of the metal bill, said that the Democrats would insist that some tariff legislation be enacted, and he has reason to hope that a sufficient number of insurgent Republicans would co-operate with the Democrats to pass the metal, chemical, sugar and woolen bills, through the senate.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH

Could Hardly Eat. Gradually Grew Worse. Relieved by Peruna.

Mr. A. M. Ikerd.

Mr. A. M. Ikerd, Box 31, West Burlington, Iowa, writes:

"I had catarrh of the stomach and small intestines for a number of years. I went to a number of doctors and got no relief, and finally one of my doctors sent me to Chicago, and I met the same fate. They said they could do nothing for me; said I had cancer of the stomach and there was no cure. I almost thought the same, for my breath was offensive and I could not eat anything without great misery, and I gradually grew worse.

"Finally I concluded to try Peruna, and I found relief and a cure for that dreadful disease, catarrh. I took five bottles of Peruna and two of Manalin, and I now feel like a new man. There is nothing better than Peruna, and I keep a bottle of it in my house all the time."

The names of survivors among the third class or steerage passengers were sent from the Carpathia to the scout cruiser Chester, which relayed them to the Salem, to be relayed again to the commandant of the naval station at Newport, R. I. It was picked up by a wireless operator here as the Chester sent it.

On account of poor wireless conditions, the process of sending was slow and the names had to be repeated many times. After a portion of the list had been sent the Salem was heard transmitting a message from the Chester directing her to stop sending for a while. This was understood to be on account of interference by the Chester's wireless apparatus with the efforts of the Carpathia to communicate with shore stations.

U.S. GOVERNMENT'S MESSAGES IGNORED BY THE CARPATHIA

Dead Total 1,312.

New York, April 18.—The wireless report that there are only 705 survivors of the Titanic aboard the Carpathia still persists, but no word, as far as can be learned, has come from the Carpathia within the last thirty hours giving the exact number of shipwrecked persons aboard. From figures available at the White Star line offices it is probable that the number of dead totals 1,312.

The Carpathia is now said to be in a good working wireless zone, for numbers of private messages from survivors and dispatches to the line were constantly being received during the morning, but no word came to the repeated requests for details of the accident.

The cruisers Chester and Salem and the government wireless stations on shore stopped sending that the Carpathia might have an uninterrupted field for sending news.

Only Thirteen Boats.

The Carpathia has sent ashore the names of 125 third class passengers, and has requested the White Star line to send a ship's officer and fourteen sailors on two tugs to take charge of thirteen Titanic lifeboats at quarantine. This would indicate that only thirteen lifeboats had been found available for rescue work, instead of twenty, as had been approximated.

Men of Note Missing.

All hope has been given up that Col. Jacob Astor, Isidor Straus, Benjamin Guggenheim, George D. Widener, Major Archibald Butt, military aide to President Taft, Henry B. Harris, the theatrical manager, and Charles M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk railway, have been saved.

The Carpathia's wireless operator sent word this morning that Col. Astor was not on the Carpathia and he did not know whether Benjamin Guggenheim or Maj. Archibald Butt were aboard. The scout cruiser Salem requested information regarding Maj. Butt from the Carpathia but the Cunarder gave no answer.

George D. Widener, the Philadelphia capitalist, is not aboard the Carpathia. That information was received by the White Star line offices early today. No mention was made of his son, Harry Elkins Widener, in the wireless dispatch.

Hope For Relatives.

Many of the wireless messages by survivors to their families show that they hold the hopes that those from whom they had been separated were safe aboard other steamers.

"I am praying that my husband has been picked up by another steamer," was a wireless message sent by a survivor to her family.

Only a few of those who still clung to a faint hope that their family or friends might still be numbered among the saved aboard the Carpathia remained all night at the White Star line offices. The wireless late yesterday from the Chester that the first and second-class passenger lists had been sent ashore was a heavy blow to the many who kept vigil for many hours at the offices of the company.

Will Care for Survivors.

Special arrangements have been made to care for the survivors when the Carpathia docks. Customs regulations have been suspended and there will only be a short inspection at quarantine by the health department, as is mandatory under the law. Police reserves will be stationed about the Cunard line pier, and only those who are friends or relatives of the survivors with proper credentials will be permitted on the pier.

Taxicab and hotel accommodations have been provided for first and second cabin passengers who are not able to proceed at once to their homes, while the steerage passengers will be cared for by the immigration department at Ellis Island or by the municipal lodging house, which has been placed at their disposal.

A score or more of wealthy society women have organized a relief committee to aid the steerage survivors of the Titanic and have telegraphed President Taft offering to assist the government in the work of caring for the third-class passengers.

CONNAUGHT SENDS SYMPATHETIC MESSAGE.

Ottawa, Ont., April 18.—The duke of Connaught, governor-general of Canada, today sent the following message to President Taft at Washington:

"I have delayed telegraphing to you in the hope that Maj. Butt might still be among the saved, but fear there is now no hope. Accept the expression of my deepest sympathy on this gallant officer's tragic end and the loss to yourself of a devoted member of your staff. I also take this opportunity of assuring you of my heartfelt sympathy with the United States in the loss of so many of its citizens through the awful catastrophe of the sinking of the Titanic. —"ARTHUR."

White Star Boat Sails.

New York, April 18.—The steamer Cedric of the White Star line sailed from this port at noon. There had been reports that she was to await the arrival of the Carpathia and that J. Bruce Ismay was to return to England on her, but she did not wait for the Cunarder's arrival in port.

GIRL MURDERED BY JEALOUS MAN

Chicagoan Also Wounds Rival By Shot From Behind.

Chicago, April 18.—While walking along the street together, two persons were each shot in the back of the head today by Nicholas Skaplas, 22 years old. One of the victims was Florence Miller, a year younger than the assailant. Her companion was Phillip Tenerelli, a few years older.

One bullet struck Miss Miller behind the right ear, and inflicted a fatal wound. The shot that hit Tenerelli furrowed his scalp.

Skaplas and Tenerelli were rivals. Both were locked up.

WHO HEADS TAFT MEN IN MINNESOTA?

Caswell Says He Will Hereafter Treat Ed Smith as Head.

St. Paul, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—Irving A. Caswell, who has charge of the Roosevelt campaign in Minnesota, today gave out an interview calling attention to the confusion that is alleged to exist concerning the responsible head of the Taft movement in Minnesota.

"The Roosevelt committee is in no way to blame for this confusion," said Mr. Caswell. "Men professing to have close relationship with the Taft movement have proposed to us that we drop the fight and join in a movement for an uninstructed delegation, and we have, of course, refused to consider any such proposition.

"Others declare that these men are not authorized to speak for the Taft movement. How can we know who is and who is not authorized, when we have been unable to find out who is at the head of the Taft campaign, even by writing to Congressman McKinley, who has charge of the national Taft campaign?

"The trouble is that our opponents refuse to play the game according to modern rules, but persist in following the midnight methods now repudiated in all progressive states.

"So far as we are concerned, we shall hereafter treat E. E. Smith, chairman of the Republican state central committee, as the real head of the Minnesota Taft campaign.

"Further, we shall say that if such things had been done in Illinois by Billy Lorimer, Hinky Dink and Bathhouse John as have been done in Minnesota during April by our opponents, people would think a crowd of crooked politicians were getting ready to play some kind of a crooked game.

"We hope the voters of Minnesota will watch things closely and see if they are going to be given a square deal in this contest, or if they are going to be tricked and cheated by politicians."

AUDIENCE OF SCHOOL CHILDREN

Fully 1,500 Pupils Witness the Story of Homer's "Odyssey."

Fully 1,500 school children completely filled the Lyceum yesterday afternoon to witness the story of Homer's "Odyssey" as told by the moving pictures. It was a very enthusiastic and hilarious audience, but the children appeared to be deeply interested in the pictures and after the show began were very orderly.

Complaints were made to the building inspector and Mayor McCuen today by two well known Duluth women that the children were allowed to stand or sit in the aisles, and that sometimes two or three occupied one seat. They claimed that there would have been grave danger of a panic in case of an alarm of fire.

"There was not as much danger as there would be right in the schools," said Manager Charles A. Marshall today. "We had every exit from the Lyceum open throughout the afternoon and a man stationed at each door. We took this extra precaution because of the presence of the children. Mr. Eberhart timed them when they left and it took just three minutes to empty the entire theater through all these exits. Naturally a lot of boys and girls are not as quiet as an audience of grown people and perhaps some of them did sit together, but there were no seat coupons issued and we could not very well tell them where they should sit. They took their own seats and they sat with their friends. They were just as safe and a whole lot better off than they would have been on the street."

LORIMER BROKEN DOWN BY STRAIN

Senator's Fight to Keep His Seat Has Undermined His Health.

Chicago, April 18.—Conflicting reports are current regarding the condition of United States Senator William Lorimer, who has been ill for the last ten days.

One report was published saying that he was seriously ill. This was denied by members of his family and by his physician, who said that Senator Lorimer had improved greatly in the last few days.

Overwork in the primary campaign and the strain of the fight to retain his seat in the senate are said to have undermined his health.

DREDGING FOR NEW COAL DOCK

Piling Is Driven and Site of Dock Is Being Filled in.

Work on the dredging for the new $1,000,000 coal dock at West Duluth for the Island Creek Coal company was begun yesterday. Whitney Bros. have just completed the driving of about 2,000 feet of piling for the new dock.

A suction dredge is now at work on the site of the dock, and actual construction of the dock itself will not begin for about ten days. The Zenith Dredging company will have charge of the dredging work. The local company was given the contract early last fall in competition with several other companies. The company will receive $50,000 for the work, which includes a strip 200 feet wide to be dredged out and the site for the new dock filled in.

The Island Creek company purchased the site for the new dock early last fall from the West Duluth Land company, through the agency of John A. Stephenson & Co. It is a choice water front location, containing about thirty acres at the foot of Fifteenth avenue west, just west of the Virginia & Rainy Lake sawmill. The Zenith Furnace company's dock and furnace are directly west of the Island Creek site. The price paid for the site was said to be $100,000. The property has a frontage of 550 feet on the water and a depth of 3,300.

The new dock will connect with private trackage and spurs from the Northern Pacific, Soo line and Canadian Northern railroads. It will be equipped with the latest modern machinery, including the new type of steel bridges, and will have a handling capacity of 1,500,000 tons and a storage capacity of 750,000 tons. The dock will be devoted exclusively to the handling of the Island Creek splint coal, mined in West Virginia, where the company owns 30,000 acres. Next to the No. 7 dock of the Pittsburg Coal company, the Island Creek dock will be the largest at the Head of the Lakes.

NEW LIBRARY WILL BE FINISHED MAY 1.

The new Carnegie library at the northwest corner of Central avenue and Elinor street will be finished and ready for occupancy by May 1. The announcement was made yesterday by the Jacobson Bros., who report that the work will be completed in the contract time.

The entire exterior of the structure has been finished and workmen are now putting the finishing touches on the interior of the building. The large boiler for the basement has just arrived and will be installed some time this week. The other fixtures are on hand and will also be installed within the next two weeks.

The building is only one story, with a very high basement, giving the structure a two-story appearance. The entire front of the building, covering forty feet, is almost entirely of glass. There are two large double windows and two glass doors, which practically take up the entire front of the structure. The main entrance is on Central avenue.

WANTS TO SELL BATCH OF BONDS

State Treasurer Smith Says State Could Raise About $5,000,000.

St. Paul, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.) — With counties, municipalities, drainage districts and school districts through the state pleading for money with which to make improvements and being forced to go to bond brokers where they pay 5 and 6 per cent for loans, Walter J. Smith, state treasurer, is preparing to urge the state board of investment to shell out all the bonds of other states lying in the treasurer's vault and sell them, if anything near their purchase price can be obtained.

"The money should be brought to our own state," he insists, "and used for improving it."

Mr. Smith made up a list of bonds this morning which he believes the state would do well to dispose of immediately and bring the money, aggregating more than $5,000,000, to Minnesota for use by its people. All of the money could be loaned here at 4 per cent, he said, and but a small portion of the bonds are now drawing above 3 per cent.

GLEANED ALONG THE POLICE RUN

Wash your face; get that powder and rouge off; do it before you do anything else."

Such was the terse parting advice which Police Judge Frank H. Cutting handed Elsie Robertson when he gave her a suspended sentence after she had pleaded guilty to vagrancy today.

The court told her that if she had intentions of mending her ways the first steps towards respectability would be to eliminate the telltale advertising which she had smeared on her cheeks and to get away from her associates. Elsie said that she has relatives on a farm in Wisconsin and that she would go to them. The court gave her the opportunity to do so, giving her the benefit of the doubt on the question raised by the police. They reported that she has traveled a long ways along the route which leads through the bright lights and across the dead line where the red globes decorate front doors from dusk to dawn.

Elsie gave her name at headquarters as Leona Russell, but she was too well known to get away with it. She was picked up shortly before 1 o'clock this morning by Humane Officer Bob McKercher, while walking along Superior street. She was accompanied by Etta Hines, alias Ida Patterson, 16 ld, who was also placed under arrest. Officer McKercher said that the two travel together and that before going on the street last night they had been drinking in a Superior street cafe until after midnight.

"Elsie will admit that she is without any occupation and has been walking the streets," he informed the court this morning. The girl nodded assent.

Elsie would be a fairly good looking girl were it not for the plainly stamped marks of dissipation on her features. She is too young to be wrinkled, but she has the hardened look which tells its story only too clearly. She has had a somewhat checkered career, running along for several years past, and this is not the first time that she has been in the hands of the authorities.

Although but 16 years old, the officials state that Etta, Elsie's chum, has been bad for two years. "She went wrong when she was 14 year of age," said a police officer today. "I have known her for some time. Its another case of improper home surroundings. She hasn't had the training which would make her a good girl."

Being under 17 years of age Etta will be turned over to the juvenile court, where a disposition will be made of her case. It is claimed that she met Elsie in St. Paul, where she formerly lived, and that the two have been constant companions for some months past. Among their other accomplishments it is asserted that the girls have become proficient in the art of smoking cigarettes as well as drinking intoxicating liquors. They had the "makin's" with them when they were arrested.

Arthur Larson, 19 years old, was brought into police court today on a charge of trespassing on the property of the D. M. & N. railroad. It was reported that he had been throwing coal from a loaded car.

He pleaded guilty but the court suspended sentence after making it clear to him that he must not repeat the offense. He said that he knew it was wrong, but that his folks had no money with which to buy fuel and that he had seen others getting it along the railroad tracks without having been molested.

The boy introduced a new "wrinkle" in the way of carrying away the coal. He was wearing a hunting coat, which is fitted with very large pockets, and he was filling these pouches with the lumps which he gathered.

Harold Bergquist of 2032 London road found a valuable watch and fob lying beside the street car tracks on Superior street near Second avenue east this morning. He carried it into police headquarters and it is awaiting a claimant who can identify it.

The police department will soon be equipped with a new Indian motorcycle. It will be of the latest design and equipped with all the newest frills. It will be used from headquarters and one of the machines now in use there will be sent to New Duluth, where it will see a lot of service.

The case against John Bolot, arrested in the West end several nights ago on a charge of trespass, was dismissed in police court yesterday afternoon. It was reported that he had broken down the door of a neighbor's house to get his daughter, who had left when he came home late and alleged to be drunk. He agreed to contribute a specified sum towards the maintenance of his daughter, who has been placed in a local institution.

The records at the health department show that Eli Le Croix, for whom inquiry was made yesterday by a woman living at International Falls, died here about fifteen years ago. The cause of death was given as softening of the brain, and not a gunshot wound, as believed by the inquirer.

Out of the thirty-two applicants who took the recent civil service examinations, twenty succeeded in passing. Of the six who wanted jobs as firemen, three passed; ten of the fifteen would-be patrolmen got 75 per cent or over; four of six drivers on the fire department went on the eligible list; both stokers of the fire department made the grade and but one of the three who aspired to be assistant secretary in the police station got through. The latter was Robert Donaldson, who has been in the employ of the department the last month.

Oscar Hill, 18 years old, who was brought to St. Luke's hospital a month ago with a broken back, died yesterday at the hospital. He sustained the injury falling out of a tree which he had climbed in quest of an owl. As far as can be ascertained he had no relatives in this country and he will be buried in the paupers' field at Greenwood cemetery. He was a miner by occupation and was brought here from Little Swan, Minn., a small settlement on the range.

The funeral of Peter McDougall, the old time woodsman, who died last week in the Denver lodging house, took place today from the undertaking rooms of Flood and Horgan. He was buried in Park Hill cemetery.

Adolph Brychert, a saloon swamper, sustained a gash over the eye in falling to the sidewalk on Superior street near Lake avenue yesterday. He was taken to the police station, where the wound was dressed by Police Surgeon Murphy. He was brought into court this morning to answer a charge of drunkenness. He pleaded not guilty and his case will be disposed of next week. The police said that he is on the verge of the tremens.

John Sillanpa, a bartender, charged with the embezzlement of $53, was bound over to await the action of the next grand jury in police court this morning. He is alleged to have taken the money last Monday night.

Residents at Woodland want a poundmaster at once. They report that stray cattle are spoiling their yards and becoming a general nuisance.

ACCUSED OF THE MARSH MURDER

Relative of Massachusetts Man Is Arrested at Stockton, Cal.

Stockton, Cal., April 18. — William A. Dorr, suspected of the murder of George E. March of Lynn, Mass., was arrested here last night. He was trapped through the aid of a telephone operator when he attempted to telephone his aunt, Miss Orpha Marsh, a niece of the murdered man.

Arriving in Stockton yesterday morning, he telephoned his aunt, Miss Orpha Marsh, who in turn notified the police that Dorr had returned and that he knew he was wanted. After telephoning, Dorr went into hiding. Arrangements were made with his aunt and the telephone office to reveal his whereabouts if he telephoned again, and this plan effected his capture. He was unarmed when arrested.

DUTCH BOAT IN ICE ON ATLANTIC

Has to Turn Back and Reports Water's Temperature 30 Degs.

New York, April 18.— The Dutch oil tank La Flandre, which came in today from Antwerp, reported an interesting encounter with the ice field on April 11 at 9 o'clock at night in latitude 42.02 and longitude 50.07. During the intermittent fog Capt. Claudet says that the La Flandre steamed into a large ice field, which became so thickly packed that the steamer could not penetrate it.

As far as could be seen from aloft the ice extended in all directions. The La Flandre was compelled to put about and steamed for twenty miles to the southward in order to clear the ice field. The temperature of the water on entering the ice pack registered 30 deg. and after clearing the ice pack it arose to 54 deg.

If the Titanic sank in water registering 30 deg., those who may have leaped overboard probably survived but a few moments.

SUPERIOR

SAY AGREEMENT HAS BEEN VIOLATED.

Former members of the old city baseball league, which existed prior to the formation of the Minny league, threaten drastic action unless President W. J. Sommer of the Superior team lives up to the agreement which they claim was entered into when they relinquished all claim on the Hammond Park ball grounds and donated to the Superior team the fence and bleachers which adorned the city league grounds.

The fence now surrounds Hislop park and the bleachers are those which the city league teams donated on condition that Mr. Sommer would allow the semi-pro teams to use the grounds on any Sunday that they were not being used by the Superior club. They were not to be charged for the use of the grounds. That Mr. Sommer has failed to live up to his part of the agreement is stated by some who also claim that he asked $10 from them for use of the park for one afternoon this season.

Unless he lives up to his part of the agreement, steps will be taken to remove the fence and bleachers from Hislop park.

University Extension.

Prof. Louis E. Raber, dean of the extension division of the university, arrived in Superior yesterday for the purpose of ascertaining whether the establishment of a branch would be justifiable. This noon, following luncheon, he spoke at the Commercial club on the functions of the extension division and its aim. After his talk a committee of Commercial club members will be appointed to secure the sentiments of the citizens. The plan is to bring the advantages of university instruction to those who cannot attend the institution.

Will Compete at Washburn.

Miss Hermia Mueller, representing the Superior high school and Miss Marguerite Crosby, representing the Nelson Dewey school will leave tomorrow for Washburn, Wis., where they will compete in the annual declamatory contest with the schools of the western district.

Miss Mueller will give a selection from "Rip Van Winkle," and Miss Crosby will declaim "The Death of Carver Doone." These two were winners of the girls declamatory contest held at the high school some time ago.

Boys Have Narrow Escape.

Boys swinging on the rope of the tall flagpole at the Howe school narrowly escaped serious injury about 8 o'clock last night. The combined weight of the boys loosened the pole from its mortar base and the tall staff fell to the ground, breaking into three pieces and barely missing the boys, three of whom were students of the Howe school.

THREE DAYS' FESTIVAL

Finnish Musical Societies Will Meet in Duluth in August.

About 1,500 Delegates and Visitors Will Come to City.

Under the auspices of the United Finnish Musical Societies of America, the first general musical festival, which it is hoped to make an annual affair, will be held in Duluth on Aug. 2, 3 and 4 bringing to the city something like 1,500 people.

At a meeting held last night by representatives in the city from several range and Copper Country towns, it was decided to hold the festival in Duluth.

The local committee is composed of Charles Kauppi, chairman; J. W. Lillius, Victor Gran, Andrew Haela, Thomas Arkkola, Andrew Rieppa and Dr. Arminen.

Nearly every city on the range and in the Copper Country as well as cities and towns further distant will send to Duluth on the occasion of the festival either a band or a singing society. Besides these musicians there will be many visitors.

Concerts will be held either at the auditorium or the Lyceum theater, these details being still to be worked out. A street parade of all the bands and the members of the different musical societies will be one of the features of the three days' celebration.

An open air concert on Sunday, Aug. 4, is being planned for one of the city parks. It will consist of band music and singing.

The object of the Finnish people who are leaders in the movement is to get people of that nationality more interested in music.

The musical organizations will compete, but no prizes will be offered as this is against the rules of the organization.

IS COUSIN OF JOHN B. THAYER

Duluth Woman Receives Telegram That He Was Saved.

Mrs. Irene C. Buell, Duluth's woman attorney, is a first cousin of John B. Thayer, second vice president of the Pennsylvania railroad, one of the many wealthy and prominent men on board the Titanic when it met with disaster.

Conflicting reports as to Mr. Thayer's safety have been received. Late last evening Mrs. Buell received a telegram from other relatives of Mr. Thayer residing in St. Paul, in which she was assured that he was among those saved.

Associated Press dispatches today state that a wireless message has been received from Mrs. Thayer which would indicate that Mr. Thayer was lost. Mr. Thayer, his wife and a 14-year-old son, Jack, were on the boat, and are said to be on the Carpathia.

At the general offices of the Pennsylvania railroad, Mr. Thayer is reported to be among those saved and among the survivors on the Carpathia. His name is in the list of survivors sent by wireless.

"Mr. and Mrs. Thayer are very dear friends of mine," said Mrs. Buell this morning. "He is a first cousin. I was greatly relieved when I received assuring messages from St. Paul to the effect that the entire family had been saved. I understand, however, that there is some doubt as to the safety of Mr. Thayer, although in the telegram received by me last evening, there was nothing to indicate but what he had been saved, as well as his wife and child."

Mr. Thayer is a resident of Philadelphia and is ranked as one of the wealthy men of the East.

TORRENCE TRIAL NEARING AN END.

The second trial of Mrs. Eleanor Torrence, charged with grand larceny, is drawing to a close in district court. The taking of testimony may be concluded tomorrow and if there are no unforeseen delays, the case will probably be submitted to the jury at that time. The defense put several witnesses on yesterday afternoon, among whom were Mrs. Alvin Messler, T. J. McKeon, M. J. Goldberg and A. W. Torrence, husband of the defendant. The state has a few witnesses for rebuttal.

YES--ROLLER SKATES ARE COMING BACK--STRONG

By C. L. SHERMAN

Before Allowing an Operation

Please Read These Two Letters.

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will prove how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before. Then after all that suffering Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored her health.

HERE IS HER OWN STATEMENT.

Paw Paw, Mich.—"Two years ago I suffered very severely with a displacement—I could not be on my feet for a long time. My physician treated me for several months without much relief, and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weeks and came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. To-day I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise every woman who is afflicted with any female complaint to try it."—Mrs. ORVILLE ROCK, R. R. No. 5, Paw Paw, Mich.

"THERE NEVER WAS A WORSE CASE."

Rockport, Ind.—"There never was a worse case of women's ills than mine, and I cannot begin to tell you what I suffered. For over two years I was not able to do anything. I was in bed for a month and the doctor said nothing but an operation would cure me. My father suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so to please him I took it, and I improved wonderfully, so I am able to travel, ride horseback, take long rides and never feel any ill effects from it. I can only ask other suffering women to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation."—Mrs. MARGARET MEREDITH, R. F. D. No. 3, Rockport, Ind.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

This Week's Sunday School Lesson

WRITTEN FOR THE HERALD BY REV. J. S. KIRTLEY, D. D.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON: APRIL 21.

Mark iii, 7-19; Matt v, 13-16: Appointment of the Twelve.

CONNECTION.

It was probably in the summer of A. D. 28, soon after the opposition to Him which showed itself in the attack on Him when He failed to observe their regulations about the Sabbath day. He had an object in view and it was necessary to organize His followers in order to accomplish that object. They needed to be organized, because they were to be the nucleus of His church and they had common interests as well as common duties. The selection of the twelve was the beginning of organization.

THE LESSON.

I.

Why He Chose Apostles. 7-12.

"And Jesus with His disciples withdrew to the sea; and a great multitude from Galilee followed; and from Judaea, and from Jerusalem, and from Idumaea, and beyond the Jordan, and about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, hearing what great things He did, came unto Him. And He spake to His disciples, that a little boat should wait on Him because of the crowd, lest they should throng Him; for He had healed many; insomuch that as many as had plagues pressed upon Him that they might touch Him. And the unclean spirits, whensoever they beheld Him, fell down before Him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God. And He charged them much that they should not make him known."

1. CO-WORKERS.—If you want to see how much He needed help, read this statement again about the amount of work He had to do, with emphasis on the words "great multitude" twice used, the words that tell the many places the people came from and the way they pressed on Him and sought relief from disease by a touch of His person and how He had to get in a boat and go out on the water to avoid the crushing throng. He needed help, because the people needed more than one man could give, even though that man was the omnipotent Son of God. The people required that He multiply Himself by twelve and by hundreds. He needed men to carry on His future work.

2. EXCITEMENT. — His teachings, so original and vitalizing, excited them but His healings much more. The disciples needed discipline, all of them; a few of them can be got together and trained and they can train others and thus help control them all. He didn't gather the people around Him just to give them healing and turn them loose. That only brought them within His reach for His further and higher work in them. Here was a distressing situation. He wants testimony from those who can speak with true experience, not from demons who can give Him a bad reputation by seeming to commend him. He must train men to handle men. The future is in their minds and they must be like an army, ready to meet the issues.

II.

Whom He Chose. 13-19.

"And He goeth up into the mountain, and calleth unto Him whom He himself would; and they went unto Him. And He appointed twelve, that they might be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach and to have authority to cast out demons: and Simon He surnamed Peter; and James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and them He surnamed Boanerges, which is, Sons of thunder; and Andrew and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew and Thomas, and James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddaeus, and Simon the Cananaean, and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed Him."

"And He cometh into a house."

1. FRIENDS.—There were three stages in their friendship. First they were simply believers in Him as the Christ, occasionally spending a few days with Him, especially on unusual occasions, as at the wedding at Cana of Galilee; then they became permanent attendants on Him, with occasional returns to their homes and employments; then twelve were chosen to be with Him constantly and prepare to take charge of His work.

2. VARIETY.—Notice them as individuals and then as groups. An Apostle means, in the Greek, "one sent," the same as the Latin word "missionary." In the several lists given they are grouped the same way, the three most important men first. Here they are—Peter, a strong masterful man, leader, spokesman, his primacy personal and not official. James, a man of fiery zeal. John, the poet and mystic, the one who knew Christ best of all and was loved best by the Master. Andrew, whose name means "manly," a quiet, patient helper. Philip, the man who had a talent for finding out things and people. Nathaniel, or Bartholomew, a guileless man, not a leader. Matthew, the publican, who wrote for all future ages the gospel. Thomas, who was a literalist, and had to be shown every thing. James the son of Alpheus, of whom we know nothing but his name and Thaddeus, or Judas, who left us one question asked at the time of the last supper. Simon, whom we know as a zealot. Judas, who became a disciple and then betrayed Him; a man with some good sentiments, perhaps as good as those of some of the others. But he grew away from Jesus, while they grew towards Him. Love of money, or resentment because Christ didn't establish a splendid kingdom as all expected Him to do, or hatred of Christ for knowing his dark soul too well led him to betray his master. He chose from all grades and talents. We must not fail to read in Matthew that He spent the night in prayer before He chose them, nor that He gave them a great and varied mission. Read it. They are to represent Him. They are to preach, write, lead, teach after He has gone and He must get them ready. This action was also an assertion of His Messiahship. It would mean that He was the head of a spiritual Israel, with its twelve leaders.

III.

Responsibilities of Disciples. Mat. v: 13-16.

"Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a lamp, and put it under the bushel, but on the stand; and it shineth unto all that are in the house. Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

1. INVOLUNTARY.—Whether they will or not, they sustain a certain relation to the non-disciples, or the world, as we say, that is vital. The only way to express it is by the two figures of speech, salt and light. These words are taken from the sermon on the mount, spoken soon after the choice of the twelve, and partly for their benefit. Salt performs the double function of an antiseptic and a seasoning, to prevent putrefaction and please the taste, so disciples are to check the world's sins and season it with the grace of righteousness. As light's mission is to reveal objects, inspire activity and heal maladies so the mission of the disciple is to reveal our sins and our Savior to us, guide us in the path to Him and ensprit us in taking that path.

2. VOLUNTARY.—We can keep the salt from becoming useless, as it may by being thrown in contact with earth and rain, and the light must be kept at its brightest, in the best place and turned on the right object. That is in the hands of the disciple, whether apostle or private Christian. Christ gives us the salt and light; we must use them aright.

WHAT THE MASTERS SAY.

A brilliant Oxford student was giving himself to the Wesleyan Missionary society for African service. His tutor remonstrated. "You are going out to die in a year or two. What reward will you have for all your work? It is madness." The young fellow (who did die after being on the field only a year) answered: "I think it is with African missions as with the building of a great bridge. You know how many stones have to be buried in the earth all unseen to be a foundation for the bridge. If Christ has chosen me to be one of the unseen stones lying in an African grave I am content; certain as I am that the final result will be a Christian Africa."—Pollard.

An Eastern merchant once stored a large quantity of salt in houses with earthen floors. After a time he found to his chagrin that all which had come into contact with the earth was spoilt. In the parallel passage in Luke (xiv: 34f.) it is said that such salt is neither fit for the land nor for the dunghill. This perhaps implies that salt-containing earth was sometimes used for manure, as is said to be the case in the modern East. If it has lost its savor it is worthless, even for that purpose.—W. T. Smith.

PERTINENT QUESTIONS.

1.—To what extent is Jesus dependent on His disciples to do His work?

2.—Can we do all the kinds of work He did?

3.—Was the office of apostle designed to be a permanent one?

4.—Can any disciple multiply the power of Jesus?

5.—Can one renew his saltiness after it is lost?

6.—Which is the greater obstacle to the gospel, the sins of the world or the dullness of the disciples of Christ?

KNOX SATISFIED WITH HIS TRIP

Secretary of State Believes He Accomplished His Purpose.

Washington, April 18.—Secreary Knox returned to the capitol yesterday, satisfied that he had accomplished the mission upon which he was sent by President Taft to the Caribbean republics. Mr. Knox expressed himself as pleased with his trip, which, despite its hardships, had no ill effects upon the secretary or Mrs. Knox.

The secretary, in a formal statement to the press, said that two forces, actuated by selfish motives, had optrated to perpetuate misrule in the countries he visited by misrepresenting the attitude of the state department toward these governments. One force is domestic to these countries, and the other is in the United States. By personal contact with the heads of the governments visited, the secretary believes that he has been able, partially at least, to counteract the influencts of which he complains.

He also emphasized what he considers the necessity of helping the weaker republics to avoid specific conditions in which the United States might be embarrassed by its assertion of the Monroe doctrine.

NINE DEFENDANTS IN THE SHOE MACHINE CASES FREE.

Boston, Mass., April 18.—On motion of the government attorneys, the complaints against nine of the defendants in the government's suit to dissolve the United Shoe Machinery company were dismissed in the United States district court here. These defendants had demurred on the ground that they were not parties to the organization of the United Shoe Machinery company, and did not share in its profits.

They are the United Awl & Needle company, United Fast Color Eyelet company, S. A. Fellon & Son company, J. C. Rhodes & Co., incorporated, Rimmon Eyelet company, S. C. & C. corporation and Thomas G. Plant company.

This will enable the government to proceed at once to the trial of the United Shoe Machinery company and ten subsidiaries which have filed answers.

"DIRTY WORK IS DONE FOR TAFT"

Roosevelt Makes Charge and Says President Is Helplessly Acquiescent.

Omaha, Neb., April 18.—"It is not a nice thing to use evil instruments in order to do dirty work," said Col. Roosevelt in an attack last night upon supporters of the Taft administration. "It is an even less nice thing to throw the evil instruments aside when they are broken and loudly make believe that they are not intentionally used."

Col. Roosevelt charged that the president's managers, "with the helpless acquiesence of Mr. Taft," were relying solely upon the support of the bosses who stand for all that is worst in our political life.

"There is not one state out of ten in which Mr. Taft would have any chance if the vote were left to the people themselves" he asserted.

Later on he said:

"Outside of the delegates that represent either the unscrupulous use of patronage or else sheer fraud, Mr. Taft's strength would be trivial and indeed negligble in the present contest."

Profit by Wrong-Doing.

"To profit by wrong-doing," he added, "is mightily little better than actually to do wrong, and the administration is seeking to profit by this wrong-doing."

Col. Roosevelt's speech was delivered in the Auditorium here at the end of his first day's campaign in Nebraska. It was a raw, forbidding day, with a sprinkle of snow in the morning, but there were crowds of good size wherever Col. Roosevelt spoke.

"POLITICAL PLAY" RETORTS BRYAN

Question As to "Dark Horse" Support Not in Good Faith, He Says.

Lincoln, Neb., April 18. — In reply to an inquiry as to his attitude toward presidential candidates in the Nebraska primary, W. J. Bryan has sent a telegram to Arthur Mullen, Clark's manager in Nebraska.

Mr. Mullen telegraphed Mr. Bryan in East Liverpool, Ohio, in common with other candidates for delegateships to the national Democratic convention. He asked whether Mr. Bryan would support defeated primary candidates in the convention, should the candidate receiving the Nebraska preference vote be withdrawn and in preference to a dark horse candidate.

Mr. Bryan replied as follows:

"Your inquiry received. As you know my position your telegram could not have been sent in good faith and I am not willing that you shall deceive the public by sending it. You know that Dunn, Loomis, Westover and I are for any Progressive and against any reactionary and you know that Hitchcock, Volpp and Smith are for Harmon. Your refusal to express a preference for Progressive delegates cannot reflect Mr. Clark's wishes, at least I shall not believe it until he indorses your action or refuses to repudiate it. I am sending him a copy of this dispatch."

CONFEREES FAIL TO AGREE ON DIRECT VOTE.

Washington, April 18.—The failure of the conferees of the two houses of congress on the resolution providing for the popular election of United States senators to reach an agreement was announced to the senate by Senator Clark of Arkansas, who said he would bring up the matter in the senate next Tuesday. An effort will be made to have the senate recede from its amendment providing for federal control of senatorial elections.

Woman's Realm

About $8,000 a year is required for the running expenses of the Young Women's Christian association of Duluth and a financial campaign has been planned to be carried on by the local association in May for the purpose of raising this sum. The sum is to be raised in eight days with a slogan of "$1,000 a day" to work on.

The plan has been fully worked out and at a luncheon held this noon at the association building at which the members of the board of directors of the association entertained the men of the advisory board, the matter was discussed and the plan perfected and the campaign will be launched on May 16. The budget for the past year was presented to the advisory board at this time showing a total of $8,000 as covering the expenses for a year and the women expect to raise this sum easily for their work.

The plan is to make a list of the men in all lines of business, and their names will be divided among ten teams of women with ten women in each team.

One team will approach the wholesale, manufacturing and commission men; another the bankers, architects, builders and contractors; two teams will be assigned to the retail merchants; one to the real estate, insurance and loan people; one team the attorneys and physicians; one team the lumber, fuel and ice men; one team will have the railroad, marine and mining interests; one of the board of trade, and one of the women of independent means.

This plan was outlined by Mrs. E. F. Byers, one of the national secretaries of the association, and has been adopted by the national board as most satisfactory. It has been tried out successfully in other cities and the local organization expects to meet with success here.

Miss Mattie M. Trimble, general secretary of the local association, will have general charge of the campaign, assisted by an executive board chosen from the board of directors of the association and the territorial committee of this North Central territory, with headquarters at Minneapolis, will aid. Mrs. R. H. Passmore, chairman of the finance committee of the territorial board, and Miss Frances M. Crittenden, city secretary of the territory, will also aid in the work.

Teams Being Chosen.

Teams for this work are being picked out now by the members of the board of directors and the 100 women who will compose these teams will be given a luncheon on Tuesday, May 14, at which time the territorial workers will speak, giving a general outline of the campaign and special instructions in reference to the soliciting and also along what lines the association is working and accomplishing the most good.

A committee of working girls will also be chosen from among the members of the association, by the members themselves to solicit among the business girls of the city for smaller donations and memberships, as a secondary aim of the contest is to add 500 names to the membership list.

A banquet for the business girls who will be workers in the campaign will be given on Wednesday evening, May 15, when they will receive their instructions on the work.

The women of the ten eams will meet each morning at 9:30 or 10 o'clock before starting out on the day's work and they will meet again at 2 for discussion of notes and again at 4:30 for tea and reports of the day's work.

Some method of displaying the progress of the campaign will be devised such as a thermometer, clock, ladder or something of the kind.

Campaigns have been carried on in Sioux City, Iowa, and Des Moines, Iowa, recently under this plan, which have both been very successful.

In the former city, of about 40,000 inhabitants, $6,000 was raised, and in Des Moines, of about 85,000 inhabitants, $10,000 was raised.

At the luncheon this noon at the local building covers were laid for the board members, Mesdames W. C. Agnes, W. A. McGonagle, Watson S. Moore, Carroll Graff, Germond, Robert Smith, A. C. Taylor, Z. D. Scott, J. H. Claypool, T. J. Chapman, W. J. Hughes, A. S. Manley, J. A. Watterworth, W. J. McCabe, W. H. Cole, T. J. Davis, Elmer McLeod, W. J. Olcott, S. R. Holden, H. H. Phelps, S. W. DULUTH LADIES SAY IT'S GREAT Duluth ladies are delighted with "Minnesota" macaroni and spaghetti. Even people who never liked these foods before, are charmed with the delicious, nut-like flavor of the "Minnesota" brand.

Good macaroni and spaghetti are the most nourishing foods known, and they can be prepared in so many delightful ways that no one ever tires of them. They agree with any stomach, and a family will feel much better if they eat less meat and more macaroni and spaghetti.

But if you want that rich, nut-like flavor be sure and get the delicious "Minnesota" brand macaroni or spaghetti—made from the finest Northern Durum wheat, with all the nourishing Gluten left in. It is easily digested and never gets soggy. All good Duluth grocers sell it.

ANNETTE'S GOWN IS A SENSATION

ANNETTE KELLERMAN.

Annette Kellerman, who admits that she is the most beautiful woman in the world, appeared at the Metropolitan opera house in New York this week in her idea of full evening dress. It cons'sted of a combination of scarlet and white, high at the neck and the—hem—if she had worn boots it would not have come to the tops of them—and a little red and white cap. Annette was almost as much a sensation as Caruso, who was singing that night in "Rigoletto." Annette has sailed for England, but she will return.

ST. CLAIR-FINDLEY.

Prominent Wedding in Social Circles.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. George A. St. Clair, 1125 East Superior street, was the scene last evening of one of the prettiest home weddings of the season when their daughter, Lillian became the bride of Samuel H. Findley, jr., of Minneapolis.

Trimmed with smilax and flowers until it was a perfec bower of beauty the home made a beautiful setting for a beautiful social event. The reception hall was all in green and white the stairway and hall window being banks of green with white roses intertwined. The parlor with its circular windows was pretty with smilax and American beauties in large clusters added a touch of glowing color to the scene and in the center of the window alcove where the bridal party stood, a beautiful wedding bell of white roses was suspended. In the library red roses were effectively arranged and Killarney roses formed a mound on the dining room table.

To the strains of the wedding march played by La Brosse's orchestra the bridal party descended the stairs and met Mr. Findley and his best man, Edwin C. Phinney of Minneapolis at the improvised altar. Little Misses Marion Dight and Agnes Alexander in little white frocks came down first and stretched white ribbons forming an aisle for Miss Rachel St. Clair, maid of honor, who wore a gown of blue chiffon and carried American Beauty roses. She was followed by the bride on the arm of her father. Her gown was of white stain made with a medium sweep train and she carried a shower bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley.

Rev. A. W. Ryan, pastor of St. Paul's Episcopal church read the service at 8 o'clock and a large reception was held following.

Mrs. St. Clair wore a handsome gown of black velvet and was assisted by Mrs. Eugene St. Clair, Mrs. George H. St. Clair, Mrs. A. B. Wolvin, Mrs. John G. Williams, Mrs. W. J. Olcott, Mrs. Herbert Spencer, Mrs. J. H. Dight and Mrs. A. W. Ryan.

Miss Marjorie Harrison caught the bridal bouquet which Mrs. Findley tossed from the stair landing.

Among the out of town guests were: Mrs. Samuel H. Findley, the bridegroom's mother; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Nye and Wilfred Nye, Jr., Mrs. George W. Stricker, Mrs. Charles Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. George H. St. Clair, Miss Catherine Carle, T. W. Findley, W. H. Sudlow, Edward Lynch and W. A. Williams, all of Minneapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Findley left for a Southern trip last night and will be at home in Minneapolis after June 1.

"VOTES FOR WOMEN" NOTES

In Rome the parliamentary commission has approved a bill giving the franchise to all women of 25 possessing certain qualifications of education and property.

Newspapers in France are generally favorable to extending the municipal franchise to women and a majority of them make a feature of the woman suffrage department, giving a great deal of space to the question. The agitation has spread to the remotest reglons, and the National Suffrage association is conceded to be one of the most important organizations in France.

In Sweden the women are mustering their forces to elect as many women town councillors as possible. Four have been elected in Stockholm and several in the smaller cities. The government bill on woman suffrage introduced in the lower house of parliament last week, is now under debate, and it is reported to have thus far received most favorable comment.

Former Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks says: "Whenever women have obtained the right to vote they have excercised their privilege with as much wisdom and with as sincere a desire to advance the general good as men have ever manifested. This is, of course, an obvious truth to those who have given the great subject—and indeed it is a great one—the most indifferent consideration."

The people of New Zealand are contemplating with amusement the struggle to secure the vote for women in other parts of the world, and they delight in pointing out the fallacies advanced by the opposition. Twenty years ago they heard the prophecies that New Zealand women would be degraded and treated insolently at the polls; that they would neglect their homes and children if given the ballot, etc., but after twenty years' experience these predictions cannot be verified.

THE EVENING STORY

HER BISQUE DOLL

By Philip Kean.

Fleurette was 18, and she had never owned a doll. "Of course, I am too old for one now," she would say, wistfully, as she passed the shop window on her way home from work. She was an apprentice in a millinery shop. Now and then little Fleurette sighed for luxuries. "I never have really had a good time, you know, mother," she would say, and her mother would kiss her and sigh. "If only your father had lived, Fleurette."

The future seemed to hold nothing for them except the possibility of Fleurette's success as a milliner. She had been promised $3 a week as soon as she learned the first principles of her trade. When, therefore, she came home one night with a sore throat, there was consternation. "I simply can't be sick," she said, desperately. "Madame will get some one else in my place if I stay away."

She went to bed that night with her throat wrapped up, and when she struggled to her feet in the early down, her head was hot with fever. "But I must go," she insisted, and at last her mother helped her into her clothes and started her on her way. The day was one of deadly and excruciating effort. Fleurette's hot head and heavy eyes seemed to weigh her down. Her needle in her trembling hand seemed to take stitches that accomplished nothing. Madame spoke to her sharply several times, and at last sent her home. "And don't you come back until you are rid of that cough," she said.

Fleurette, staggering homeward, felt that she didn't care. If someone else did take her place. She wanted only to get to her mother, to lay her hot head on the pillow and sleep. Her feet were so heavy that at last she stopped and held on to the railing that ran in front of one of the big windows of the shop where they was displayed boxes of blond and brunette bisque dolls. "Oh, you pretty babies," she whispered. "If only I was little enough to curl up in that pink crib, how nice it would be—" She said it out aloud and a man who had stopped beside her looked down at her sharply.

"Hello," he said quickly, as she swayed, and would have fallen but for his helping hand. "Look here, kiddie, you're in a bad way."

"I think," said Fleurette, looking at him with fever-bright eyes, "I think I am very ill. But if I am going to die, I think I'd just as soon do it right here, please. "You—see, I've never had a doll."

"You're not going to die," he said briskly. "You tell me where you live and I'll have you home and in bed before you can say Jack Robinson."

"I don't want to say Jack Robinson," Fleurette protested weakly and gave him her number and leaning on his arm, was led down a side street to her waiting and anxious mother. The big man stayed in the front room, while the girl's mother made her comfortable in the inner room, and Fleurette could hear him humming like a big bee as she went into dreamland.

She had lapsed into unconsciousness by the time the big man had introduced himself to her mother. "My name is Jack Rodman," he said. "My boat came in this morning after a week's fishing on the banks. I own my own boat and in my own town you could find plenty of people who'd tell you that I have come of honest folks, and that I haven't gone back on my name. I walked down town this afternoon and saw the little girl talking to the dolls. She seemed too big for that sort of thing, so I listened, and I saw she was out of her head—but say is it true that she never had one?"

"Not since she can remember," said her mother. Rodman looked round the plain room. "I see," he said briefly, "look here, may I come again and find out how she is?"

Mrs. Du Bois knew she could trust those frank eyes. "Yes" she said, "and thank you very much for bringing my little girl back to me."

He came in an hour later with some fruit. "I thought if she was feverish the oranges might taste good to her" he said. "Let me help you" he went on eagerly. "Here I am in this old town, my boat has to go to the drydock for repairs and my time hangs on my hands."

In her extremity Mrs. Du Bois turned to him gratefully. "We have no friends and I can't leave Fleurette for a moment," she said. "I must have a doctor and medicine at once." He was up and away in a moment, coming back with a kindly, competent physician, and running out again to fill prescriptions, to get a chicken for broth and milk and eggs.

"Look here," he said, to Mrs. Du Bois, "you let me do the cooking. I've done it lots of times on my boat—and you let me watch when you get worn out." In the days that followed Mrs. Du Bois often asked anxiously, "Isn't your boat ready to sail?" and he always answered with his big laugh, "There's a lot more to do on her." It was not until Fleurette began to come back to life that he spoke of his return voyage. "In another week I must be getting home," he said.

"How can I ever repay you?" Mrs. Du Bois asked.

"Forget it," said Jack slangily, but his eyes were wet. "You must remember that you are my adopted mother—now that I haven't one of my own."

"If you were half as good to her as you have been to us, she must have been proud of you," said the grateful little lady.

"Forget it," repeated Jack, with some embarrassment, "and—oh, look here, there's just one thing I want to get Fleurette before I go—"

But he wouldn't say what it was until he came back with a long box and unfolded from many wrappings of tissue paper a bisque doll. Fleurette held out her hands for her. "Oh," she gasped, "Oh!"

"I thought you'd like her, kiddie," said Jack awkwardly. It was a happy little Fleurette who lay back in her pillows. "You wouldn't think I was really almost 19," she said, "would you? It seems such a baby thing to want a doll, but then you see when you've always wanted a thing—"

"You ought to have it? Of course you should kiddie. And now there's something else I want to have."

"What?" asked Fleurette and her mother looked at him curiously.

"A sea voyage," said Jack unexpectedly. "I've asked the doctor and he says, it would be the best thing that could happen to Fleurette. The fishing over, and I've a good cook and a couple of other men on my boat, and while things are a bit rough we should certainly try to make you comfortable.

"A week later Fleurette lay on the deck of the White Gull and watched the real gulls overhead. Beside her lay the bisque doll, and Mrs. Du Bois sewed happily in the stern.

Jack, seated at Fleurette's feet, watched her with adoring eyes. "If I hadn't stopped to look at those bisque babies I shouldn't have met you," he said. She laughed. "You must have thought me a perfect child."

"I thought you a perfect—," Jack got up suddenly and went over to her mother. "I've got to say it," he told that lady, and his voice floated back to Fleurette.

"What?" asked Mrs. Du Bois, smiling.

"I've got to tell her I love her," said Jack explosively, "but I suppose I'd better tell you first that I want you for a real mother not an adopted one."

"Dear boy," she said and kissed him. Then he went back to Fleurette. "I want you to be first mate of the White Gull, dear," he said steadily, "but I'm afraid to ask—" "Why," said Fleurette, the color flaming her cheeks.

"Because I don't see how you can love a big rough chap like me—"

"I don't love a big rough chap" said she, "but I love a man with the kindest heart in the whole world—and his name is Jack."

LIVE TOURIST REACHES CITY

First of Army of Field Glass Carriers Arrives in Duluth.

Away Up in Maine They Know "It's Cool in Duluth."

The first tourist of the present season is in the city. He is H. F. Lewis of Lewiston, Maine, and he admits that he is traveling for pleasure. "I came here, despite the fact that clear out in Maine we hear of that ancient joke about Duluth being the city where someone spent the coldest winter one summer," said the first tourist, and then he smiled.

"But I am going up fishing with some friends and I expect to stick around for ten days or so. I came here for the simple reason that I have heard lots about you and have not been here in years. Sometimes during the hot summer of Maine, and we have mosquitoes to go with the heat, I have thought about that coldest winter in a certain summer story and I wondered why you haven't capitalized it and started a big summer resort.

"People from New York come sweltering out to us and pour their troubles into our ears. Then every once in a while we get the heat ourselves and our people turn around and sympathize with the afflicted visitors. If you people had some advertising medium, associated with the hammock literature and light stuff for summer, which said, 'It's cool in Duluth,' and had it persistently poked under the sweltering countenances of the sweating, you would build up abiding fame and attract many tourists to your midsts.

"I am frankly curious to see you, but I am going to be busy in June, July and August, so I got the jump on the rest of 'em, and want to claim distinction as the first tourist of the season; kind of in the first robin of the season class.

"I was on the original trip of the North West—let me think, how many years ago was that? Well, anyway, I was on the boat and I thought that it was one of the most picturesque trips in America. My wife was with me and she quite agreed. It occurred to me then that Duluth would make an ideal summer resort for about three months in the summer, and since then every once in a while some of my friends would send me one of those 'cool in Duluth' mottos, or whatever you call them, and as they always came, either through the malign intent of my friends or through the perverseness of the weather, right when it was sweltering, Duluth has been kept fairly well in my mind.

"No, honestly, there isn't a bit of business connected with my coming. Once a man, while I was in Duluth those years ago, sold me some copper stock. But the mine, or the company, 'busted' as they say, and that shatters the least insinuation or slightest intimation that there is business connected with my trip. I can qualify for the simon pure tourist.

"In my opinion this whole country is going to boom for the next two years at least. We people in the East have that belief. The Northwest and the West are the most vital part of the producing part of the United States. Your crop prospects look very good and your two great industries, the lumber and the iron business, are adopting an expanding program. The Northwest should enjoy a very prosperous season."

IS IT THE PUBLIC'S FAULT?

Lewis Nixon, the great American shipbuilding expert, says that it is the fault of the public that the giant passenger ships have to travel fast and to take the short but dangerous northern route.

Probably there is something in that; yet it is to be noted that following the terrible Titanic disaster the vessel owners have agreed to abandon the northern route until danger is over. If that agreement had been made two weeks ago, there would have been no such horror as that which has shocked the world.

If it is the fault of the public that modern speed contests are thought necessary on sea and land, then the public ought to revise its ideas.

The need of getting from Liverpool to New York in less than six days is not so great as the shipowners seem to believe; and the need of getting from Chicago to New York in eighteen hours is not so great as the railroads seem to believe.

Men traveling on business appreciate dispatch; but what difference will it make a hundred years hence if they are compelled to stay on the road a few hours longer? We have tied down the safety-valve and thrown open the throttle until we are traveling at a mad rate of speed. But what is it getting us? Is life any happier than it was when men were quite content to cross the ocean in ten days or go from New York to Chicago in twenty-four hours? If it is happier it certainly is not made so by increased facilities for covering ground rapidly. The chief fruits of modern speed come when a Twentieth Century Limited crashes, a mass of ruined cars and quivering human flesh, into a ditch, or when a Titanic, smashing herself on an iceberg, plunges to the bottom of the ocean and destroys a thousand precious human lives.

There is a fearful lot of nonsense about this speed business. Men and women, automobiling for pleasure, speed through a beautiful landscape so rapidly that the scenery is a blur. Men and women, traveling for pleasure, demand to be dashed over the Atlantic in the shortest possible time, thus shortening the most delightful part of their trip. Men and women, traveling for business or pleasure, demand to be sped at lightning speed between cities. What does it profit them? It keys humanity up to the breaking point. It makes life a bewildering cinematograph instead of a leisurely and profitable journey. Every little while our speeding implements blow up and pitch a lot of us into eternity before our time.

What's the hurry? Will it not be as well to slow up a bit and take time to appreciate the pleasures of our trip between eternities?

They say that the demand for speed has come to be so exacting and so merciless that when vessel captains strike the foggy and ice-strewn Grand Banks where the Titanic died her titanic death, it is their habit to shut their eyes and go ahead at full speed, on the theory that the quicker they get through the perilous places the better.

If it is the fault of the public that railroads and steamboats must strike the pace that kills, then it is plain that the public needs to go off by itself and do a little quiet thinking. Speed kills—it kills the pleasure of existence, it kills the fine instincts of leisurely enjoyment, it kills the body.

Can anybody tell what benefits the world is getting out of its ever-increasing mad haste that can begin to pay for the pleasure and security that speed destroys?

How many dark horses does it take to make a winning team?

A WISE YET STUPID LAND DEALER.

As a land dealer, the state of Minnesota in one respect is marvelously wise and kind.

In another respect it is marvelously stupid and cruel.

The state held a land sale yesterday in Duluth, and did quite a tidy bit of business. It will have another each month during the summer and fall, so if you didn't buy yesterday you will have other chances.

It is a good chance to buy land if you know what you are doing, and therefore we shall examine the wise and kind aspect of the state's land business first.

The state has an abundance of good land, and it sells it in about as easy terms as you can get anywhere.

Suppose you had picked out eighty acres of land owned by the state, and had bought it at yesterday's sale for $10 an acre. That would make a total purchase price of $800. If it is the average sort of Northern Minnesota land, when it is cleared and under cultivation with ready access to market it will be worth $150 an acre, or $12,000.

The state requires you to pay down only fifteen per cent, which would make your first payment $120. The balance you have forty years to pay, and the interest on the deferred payments is only four per cent. You can scarcely find better terms than these anywhere.

So much for the good side of the state's land business. Now for the stupid and cruel side.

All the state does is to keep a record of the descriptions of the land it owns. The land is offered at auction by these descriptions—but in this sense the word "description" includes nothing about the character of the land. The state can't tell you what the land is like; it doesn't know itself. It is up to you to buy a pig in a poke, or go out and look at the land yourself; and even then you will be little better off if you are not an expert. If there is timber on the land the state keeps it. If there is mineral under the land the state keeps that, too.

The state is stupid because it does not make a thorough survey of its lands, so it will know and be able to tell the character of each piece it has for sale. It ought to be able to tell whether there is swamp, stream, hills or rocks on the land. It ought to be able to tell the character of the soil, what it is best fitted to raise, and what, if anything, it needs to make it perfectly fertile.

The state is cruel because its failure to possess this knowledge subjects purchasers to unnecessary expense and trouble and condemns some of them to failure.

When business judgment is used in the disposal of state lands, the state will have a catalogue of every acre of its land and will be able to tell intending purchasers not only where it is situated, but everything the home-seeker ought to know before he settles on a tract.

But in the meantime, if you are able to find out something about the land, the state's land sales offer you an excellent chance to safeguard your future. There is no better insurance than the ownership of a piece of good land.

But then, it's been warm enough so that some folks have got used to the smell of camphor balls.

THE TITANIC'S SMALL BOATS.

Lewis Nixon says that he is not disposed to be critical because the Titanic didn't carry enough boats to take off all on board.

On that point the world certainly will differ with him very strongly.

Mr. Nixon says that the presence of the small boats on board a liner is mostly for sentimental effect anyway, because these boats would not live in a storm. Yet these modern liners are practically stormproof themselves, and no small boats would be needed except in such cases as that in which the Titanic was destroyed.

Mr. Nixon says that the law does not require these vessels to carry enough boats to care for all on board, and therefore that the fault is the law's. That is not so. If boats were needed, it was the duty of the owners of the Titanic to provide them, law or no law. There is a law in such a case that is higher than any statute law—the law which requires those to whom human beings trust their lives to take every possible precaution.

The fact seems to be that if the Titanic had had enough boats every soul on board her might have been saved; and that fact counts for more than all the reasoning and argument human mind can conceive. Granting that any number of small boats would be no protection in a hurricane, if there were one possible chance that the small boats would save human lives, even though that chance should occur only once in a century, then each liner should carry enough boats.

And in the case of the Titanic, apparently, just such a chance happened.

After his work in the international training camp, Secretary Knox ought to be able to bat a good average in the presidential political campaign league.

BAD JUDGMENT, AT BEST.

Looking back to Monday's reports, we find that "Mr. Franklin said he had received a brief wireless dispatch from the Olympic saying she had talked with the Titanic at 4:24 o'clock this morning. The message gave no further information, Mr. Franklin said."

"This message," the Associated Press logically said, "shows conclusively that the Titanic was still afloat six hours after the accident."

Yet less than four hours after the Titanic struck she went to the bottom, two miles below, carrying more than thirteen hundred people with her.

And it is now clear that the dispatch which Franklin said "gave no further information" contained this stunning intelligence:

> Carpathia reached Titanic's position at daybreak. Found boats and wreckage only. Titanic had foundered about 2:30 a. m. All boats accounted for. About 675 souls saved, crew and passengers. Latter nearly all women and children.

Why Mr. Franklin chose to let the relatives and friends of the doomed men rest in a false security which made the inevitably disclosed blow all the more crushing, it is hard to imagine. To say that it was bad judgment is to say the kindest thing possible of his act.

But perhaps there wasn't anything premonitory in the fact that Roosevelt entered upon his Nebraska campaign in a snowstorm.

A CHANGED TUNE.

When Champ Clark carried the Illinois primaries, a prominent Southern newspaper which is fighting Wilson—and supporting Underwood, not Clark, because the state in which it is published is close to Alabama, where Underwood lives—shouted exuberantly in double-leaded editorials that the Wilson candidacy was disposed of finally.

When the Pennsylvania primaries gave Wilson seventy-four out of seventy-six delegates, this anti-Wilson newspaper discoursed animatedly of these subjects, and of no others: "Substantial Mexican Hope;" "Federal Inspection of Cotton;" "Georgia's Chemical Industries;" "Grand Opera for Children."

The Taft administration is sending out the usual supplies of seeds. Question is, will they grow to maturity by next November?

TOO BAD!

F. W. Upham of Chicago, western treasurer of the Republican national committee and a strong supporter of President Taft, wails in an interview over the outcome of the Illinois primaries.

"If it had not been for the primaries," he says, "Taft would have had at least three-fourths of the national delegates from Illinois. If the legislature had not come together in extraordinary session Illinois would have been in the Taft column beyond any question of doubt. Then the presidential primary law was passed and the people had a chance to vote, and only one district went to Taft."

This is intended to be a criticism of the presidential primary, no doubt; but praise of it could hardly go farther.

That's the point exactly.

If it hadn't been for the primary, the people would not have had a chance to vote, the bosses would have run their convention as usual, and Taft would have got the state.

Mr. Upham's viewpoint is at right angles to that of those clear observers who can see that the main thing is not to perpetuate the Republican machine or to renominate Taft, but to see to it that the people have their will, not only in elections but in nominations.

La Follette has given up the idea of a trip to the state of Washington, but he seems to hang onto that notion of a wee bit journey to Washington, D. C.

Now that both the Taft and Roosevelt leaders have taken to charging each other with coercion and intimidation to get votes, it is positively assured that there will be no personalities in this campaign.

WHAT IS THE USE?

By SAVOYARD.

It is our boast that our republic is the model government of the ages, that ours is the light that illumines the minds, ours the example that encourages the hopes, of all less fortunate peoples. How accurately did that wizard of the pen, Charles Dickens, picture the national character! The other day I heard old Joe Cannon make a speech on the Underwood wool bill that would admirably serve for one of Jeff Brick's editorials. The fact is we are made of clay, and rather common clay, at that.

For example. Here is the Sherman anti-trust law that we had fondly hoped was the perfection of American state craft. It was designed to extirpate rascally monopoly, show the teeth of the government to the "malefactors of great wealth." It was an enactment declaring all trusts bad and providing for their destruction. It was legally—and it was supposed, shrewdly—schemed to open the door of opportunity to all alike, and put all on a plane of exact equality in the business world.

Canst thou draw out leviathan with a hook? Nay verily. The government sued the Standard Oil company, alleging that that monopoly was a combination in restraint of trade and its existence in violation of and defiance of the Sherman anti-trust law. The action was prosecuted through courts of inferior jurisdiction, and ultimately the supreme court adjudicated that the defendant was an illegal combination amounting to a vicious monopoly and ordered that the thing be dissolved.

Some wit put it most happily that the court ordered the "unscrambling of the eggs," Standard Oil being nothing but a "holding company." There was great rejoicing in the household of the faithful and the daughter of the Philistines were cast down. The holding company was dissolved and separated into its constituent elements. Monopoly was rebuked; its greed reproved. The law was vindicated, and we fondly hoped that this problem that had pestered the ages was solved. Not a bit of it. The price of oil rose. The stocks of the culprit companies advanced in price. The dividends of the plutocrats were augmented. In short, Standard Oil made money out of a lawsuit that was decided averse to it in the final adjudication.

The American Tobacco company was another illegal combination in restraint of trade, in its nature precisely like Standard Oil. It, too, was sued by the government, and the action went through the courts in precisely the same way and the decision was precisely the same. The eggs were "unscrambled" precisely as the Standard Oil eggs were "unscrambled," and the result was the same—monopoly triumphant.

The Sherman anti-trust law has a criminal side, and it is just as impotent as its civil. There is the Beef trust, perhaps the most vicious, if not the most odious, of all the monopolies that curse the country. A few men, less than a dozen, in Chicago, the combined wealth of whom is hundreds of millions, fix the price of every animal that leaves the farm for the market. Nobody competes with them in the stockyards. They slaughter beeves, hogs, sheep and lambs, and fix the price of all the products of the slaughterhouse. Not a great while ago they sold not only unwholesome, but rotten provisions.

These gentry were indicted under the Sherman law. It was shown that their books were full of lies as to prices they paid and as to prices paid them. According to their fraudulent accounts their profits were ridiculously small. The testimony against them was not only strong, but absolutely conclusive. They made no defense except the general plea of not guilty. They introduced no witness. What was the result? Acquittal.

Thus it is manifest that the Sherman anti-trust law is not worth the paper it is printed on. The octopus chains of more than a score of years has been absolutely futile. The people are powerless in the grasp of monopoly. The law of supply and demand is not only antiquated, but it is absolutely abolished. A few grops of men—say half a dozen in each group—meet in secret and determine the price of every article of general consumption—steel products, farm machinery, coal, foods of nearly all descriptions, clothing, leather goods, and what not.

No wonder we have discontent. No wonder we have strikes. No wonder the cost of living daily advances. No wonder our people are separating into the two classes of the very rich and the very poor.

Then there is the money trust, the king pin of them all. It is dominated by a few establishments that can command billions. It determines who shall and who shall not be granted credit. It determines the rate of discount. Nobody can get a cent in New York to build a railroad that is designed to compete with the great trunk lines, and if promoters of the new road should go to Paris or London or Amsterdam for money they do not escape the opposition of the New York money trust that halts at no expedient to damage the credit of the would-be rival. If the Democratic congress had done its full duty that money trust would have been thoroughly investigated by this time.

Now these interests I have named are in politics. They purpose to name both tickets and they hope to make the Democratic ticket so weak that the Republican ticket will be elected. One thing is clearer than all other things—the "interests" are against Woodrow Wilson. If they can defeat him for the Democratic nomination they will have supplemented in politics their victories in the courts.

The Democratic party is to say whether monopoly shall triumph at the Baltimore convention in 1912.

THE OPEN COURT

(Readers of The Herald are invited to make free use of this column to express their ideas about the topics of general interest, but discussions of sectarian religious differences are barred. Letters should not exceed 200 words—the shorter the better. They must be written on one side of the paper only, and they must be accompanied in every case by the name and address of the writer, though these need not be published. A signed letter is always more effective, however.)

BRYAN AND SOCIALISM.

To the Editor of The Herald:

Colonel Bryan, in a recent article in The Commoner, entitled "Individualism vs. Socialism," has shown a disposition to treat the question fairly—a refreshing change from the usual denunciations as "anarchists," "free-lovers," etc., and yet, he has trained his biggest guns, so to speak, not on Socialism, but commonionism as extolled by Ruskin, for be it known that the Socialist party has remodeled Ruskin's theory to fit a practical age.

While advanced thinkers generally agree that Socialism will eventually replace the present hobbledehoy method of doing business, they realize that commonionism, like Christ's injunction to tear the other cheek, must wait until human nature turn to angel nature.

Bryan defines individualism as competition and Socialism as public ownership, (he should have added "of all public lands and utilities") so in comparing the two he says, "It is only fair to consider individualism as good as human nature can make it and then measure it with Socialism at its best." Granted; but as competition is a struggle for supremacy, an effort to rise above an adversary, the average mind can hardly conceive of it being "good." Can two people compete for mastery and each come out of the struggle on top—both satisfied The public sometimes get cheaper goods as when a manufacturer, wishing to eclipse his rival, grinds his workmen to starvation wages or replaces them with women or children—surely not an ideal system, this "robbing Peter to pay Paul."

Bryan's contention that competing parties should be placed on equal footing is amusing, considering the impossibility of keeping them there. Socialists claim they will only be on equal footing when they combine and the public will only get a square deal when it owns the combination.

Waiting for the May.

Ah! my heart is weary waiting,
Waiting for the May—
Waiting for the pleasant rambles
Where the fragrant hawthorn brambles
With the woodbine alternating,
Scent the dewy way.
Ah! my heart is weary waiting,
Waiting for the May.

Ah! my heart is sick with longing,
Longing for the May—
Longing to escape from study
To the young face fair and ruddy
And the thousand charms belonging
To the summer's day;
Ah! my heart is sore with longing,
Longing for the May.

Ah! my heart is sore with sighing,
Sighing for the May—
Sighing for their sure returning
When the summer beams are burning,
Hopes and flowers that, dead or dying,
All the winter lay;
Ah! my heart is sore with sighing,
Sighing for the May.

Ah! my heart is pained with throbbing,
Throbbing for the May—
Throbbing for the seaside billows
Or the water-wooing willows,
Where, in laughter and in sobbing,
Glide the streams away;
Ah! my heart, my heart is throbbing,
Throbbing for the May.

Waiting, sad, dejected, weary,
Waiting for the May,
Spring goes by with wasted warnings,
Moon-lit evenings, sun-bright mornings;
Summer comes, yet dark and dreary
Life still ebbs away;
Man is ever weary, weary,
Waiting for the May.

The Joy of Being a Bachelor.

Life: The advantages of being a bachelor are so many that their mere number is confusing. While one is lolling around in the midst of them, so to speak, this confusion may be disastrous, for it is just in these moments that one is most likely to fall in love with someone.

Let us, therefore, dwell on only one advantage as being paramount to all of the others.

This advantage then, is that a bachelor is always free to marry if he wants to. Think of it! There is no other condition like it!

For example, if you are once married, you are then not free to marry again when you want to. To do this you must first go to your wife and explain the matter and get her consent. You can do nothing without her co-operation.

Now, it is by no means easy in these days to get an appointment with one's wife. The object must first be fully explained beforehand or she will have none of you.

With a bachelor, however, no difficulty presents itself.

At any moment he has only to say to himself: "I believe I will get married," and the thing is as good as done.

Not that he is compelled to avail himself of the opportunity. Of course not!

The idea of any kind of freedom is never to avail one's self of it. The great advantage is that it is always there, like a deposit in the savings bank. We never draw upon it. It does us no intrinsic good. It is just there.

And so for a bachelor, "being married" is always "just there." He contemplates it with satisfaction. He can do it if he wants to.

Therein lies his supreme strength. To avail himself of the opportunity is, of course, to take away his own freedom.

Are the Papers Read.

Faribault Democrat: A few weeks since a death notice was received at the Democratic office, just before going to press.

It was set hurriedly and carelessly, perhaps, and placed on a galley of revised proof and went into the forms unread and of course contained a ridiculous error unnoticed until the telephones began to ring from all parts of the city.

A little later people began to come in; still later newspapers including great metropolitan journals and letters with clippings began to arrive, and it is expected every newspaper in Europe will soon call attention to it, and then the magazines will join in the parade, and finally the Sunday evening sermons will discuss the awful crime and the suffragettes and Nationites will be out with their clubs and hatchets.

The Turko-Italian war, the revolution and the massacres in China, Teddy's "Hat in the Ring," or no other matter, civil or religious, has so convulsed the world in 100 years as has this simple and ridiculous blunder of a printer—and it was only "doughnut" in the place of "daughter."

Of course newspapers are not read; advertisers will tell you so, but if one of them happened to sit at the newspaper desk some day and let a ridiculous error escape him, even the most simple and harmless, he would think the whole world had nothing else to do but to read his paper and read it thoroughly.

It is a mistake, however, as stated by the Chicago Tribune, that the compositor is still running or that the editor is hiding in a swamp surrounded by bloodhounds and men with shotguns.

This much is not true—at least not yet, but after all we scarcely regret having given the world a day or two of the wildest fun it ever had, but we just won't pay for the buttons that have been bursed from jackets and shirtwaists.

Funny—why the colored Sunday supplement is a poor second.

"Everybody."

Kansas City Star: It was Talleyrand who said to Napoleon: "There is somebody wiser than you, and wiser than all your councillors; and that is everybody."

Consider this in connection with the assertion of Burke: "Man is a most unwise and a most wise being. The individual is foolish. The multitude for the moment is foolish when they act without deliberation; but the species is wise, and when time is given to it, as a species it almost always acts right."

In these two sayings is embodied the argument for popular government.

Practical Hygiene.

Houston Post: During a recent epidemic of spinal meningitis in Dallas, Secretary Paul Casey of the health department went with a sanitary inspector to raise the quarantine on a negro shack and remove the big green sign.

An old negro woman came to the door.

"Now, sholly, boss, you ain't gwine ter take that sign down?" she asked.

"Yes, we are going to remove the quarantine," said Casey. "Don't you want it removed?"

"No sha, boss, 'cause dar ain't been nary collectah 'round heah sense dat sign was put up."

When Woman Is Ashamed.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

Taken From the Columns of The Herald of This Date, 1892.

•••The Duluth Transfer company will make a proposition to both the Duluth & Winnipeg and the Duluth, Missabe & Northern railroads to meet them just beyond New Duluth and furnish them trackage into the city. The Transfer company will also offer to build ore docks between Rice's Point and West Duluth. These accommodations will be offered the two roads at 3 per cent upon the actual cost, with the customary wheelage proportion for maintenance. It is doubtful whether the offer will be accepted. General Manager Fisher has positively stated that the Duluth & Winnipeg will not enter Duluth until it can do so upon its own tracks.

•••Andrew Olsen, who was hurt twelve days ago at Owens' camp in 58-17 on the Mesaba, died last night at St. Mary's hospital.

•••Rev. A. W. Ringland has tendered his resignation as pastor of the First Presbyterian church. There has been some friction in the affairs of the church for over a year and recently one of the elders, supposed to have been especially friendly to Dr. Ringland, was suspended. This is supposed to have hastened the resignation. Dr. Ringland has been pastor of the church for over eight years.

•••At a business meeting of the Unitarian society yesterday it was decided to extend a call to Rev. Mr. Southworth, who is spending his Easter vacation in Duluth. He is a member of the divinity school at Harvard and will graduate in June. It is expected he will then come to Duluth to take his first charge.

•••The Belleview house at West Duluth, owned and occupied by Mrs. E. Jarmey as a boarding house, was badly damaged by fire at 3 o'clock this morning. The insurance of $2,500 will fully cover the loss.

•••Charles Berridge, the Spalding hotel fireman, who fell through the freight elevator shaft at the hotel, is at St. Mary's hospital in a very precarious condition. He is 24 years old, English and unmarried.

•••M. V. Bingham is probably fatally ill at Saginaw, Mich. He has brain fever and typhoid.

•••The American Extravaganza company, direct from the Chicago Opera house and under the personal management of David Henderson, will present "Sinbad" at the Temple tonight. Among its catchy songs are "The Bogie Man," "What the Wild Waves Say," and "Moments When One Wants to Be Alone."

MINNESOTA AND PRESIDENCY.

It's Changing.

Albert Lea Standard: The result of the engagements of the Taft forces and the third termers, or the whole, has been Taft delegations and a Roosevelt yell.

And Illinois Confirmed Them.

Battle Lake Review: Since the North Dakota primary election Ed Smith, Billy Hamm, Jim Tawney and the three or four other Taft supporters in Minnesota have positively declared against a presidential primary.

The Machine and the People.

Luverne Journal: The Smith-Eberhart machine in this state will hold the state convention for the election of delegates to the national Republican convention as late as possible. They think that by that time President Taft will have enough delegates pledged to him from other states to assure his nomination and that the progressives of Minnesota will lay down, knowing that the fight will be useless. Ed Smith and Jim Tawney seem unable to comprehend the temper of the people. In the first place it may be set down as practically certain that Taft will not have enough delegates pledged to him at any time before the convention—for there are going to be some contests from the "rotten boroughs" of the South. And in the second place the people of this state are so tired and disgusted with Smith and his methods that they are not going to miss an opportunity to register a protest against him. Whether or not Roosevelt's hat is out of it by the time the Republican voters of this state have a chance to speak, they are going to the polls and hoist Smith from power.

Wilson.

Fairmont Sentinel: There is a movement on foot in the East on the part of the progressives of both parties to put Woodrow Wilson into the field as the best possible man of the country for the progressives to support. Not so bad an idea. Wilson is rapidly becoming the best loved because of the enemies he has made through his fearlessness and honesty.

Are You So Sure Now?

Cass Lake Times: William H. Taft will be the Republican nominee for president.—Anoka Union.

Possibly, but we challenge the Sage of Anoka to tell us who will be our next president.

Many Willing to Chance It.

Albert Lea Standard: How was it possible that one so positively wise and sure of his own judgment should make such a bad blunder as Mr. Roosevelt made in selecting and electing Mr. Taft to succeed him as president? Only two years ago the colonel told us he would stake his life on "Will" Taft. Now he tells us Mr. Taft is a plutocrat and wants us to stake our lives on himself. Not much, for he has further declared that it would be a "genuine calamity" for him to be a candidate, and so who knows what the risk would be?

And Talk Through It.

Walker Pilot: It wasn't long after Teddy threw his hat in the ring that the Taft men commenced to throw their's in the air.

Sure.

Lake Crystal Union: We warn the Taft advocates just as certain as you secure the renomination of this gentleman the Republican party will be defeated at the polls and you will be held responsible for that action.

The Rivals.

I go to concert, party, ball—what profit is in these?
I sit alone against the wall and strive to look at ease.
The incense that is mine by right they burn before her shrine;
And that's because I'm seventeen and
she is forty-nine.

I cannot check my girlish blush, my color comes and goes;
I redden to my finger tips, and sometimes to my nose.
But she is white where white should be,
and red where red should shine.
The blush that flies at seventeen is fixed at forty-nine.

I wish I had her constant cheek; I wish that I could sing
All sorts of funny little songs, not quite the proper thing.
I'm very gauche and very shy, her jokes aren't in my line;
And, worst of all, I'm seventeen, while she is forty-nine.

The young men come, the young men go, each pink and white and neat;
She's older than their mothers, but they grovel at her feet.
They walk beside her 'rickshaw wheels
—none ever walks by mine;
And that's because I'm seventeen, and
she is forty-nine.

She rides with half a dozen men (she calls them "boys" and "mashes"),
I trot along the Mall alone; my prettiest frocks and sashes
Don't help to fill my program card, and vainly I repine
From 10 to 2 a. m. Ah me! would I were forty-nine.

She calls me "darling," "pet" and
"dear" and "sweet retiring maid."
I'm always at the back, I know, she puts me in the shade.
She introduces me to men, "cast" lovers, I opine,
For sixty takes to seventeen, nineteen to forty-nine.

But even she must older grow, and end her dancing days.
She can't go on forever so at concerts,
balls and plays.
One ray of priceless hope I see before my footsteps shine;
Just think, that she'll be eighty-one when I am forty-nine!
—Rudyard Kipling.

The Crack in Your Hat.

New York Evening Sun: If you are ever unfortunate enough to smash a new derby hat, so that it cracks and in spite of vigorous rubbing and brushing refuses to resume its pristine smoothness of surface, try the simple expedient of holding a lighted match inside the hat close to the broken spot.

By the time the match has half burned out, you will find that the hat has become soft.

If you will then brush it vigorously with a stiff brush for a moment it will regain its former smoothness and look as if nothing had ever marred its surface.

Personal Appearance.

Kansas City Star: A Chicago business man gets together with William Shakespeare in the belief that "the apparel oft proclaims the man."

Practical good sense and poetical good sense usually get to the same point.

The business man is as right about it today as old Polonius was in his day—no matter when that day was.

Nobody cares whether a man is expensively dressed; but everybody likes to see a man who shows by his neatness that he is alert and "up and at 'em."

The very poorest kind of fronting for the lapel of a coat is coffee and eggs. There may frequently be excuse without discredit for threadbareness; there is no excuse for slovenliness.

The cost of living may have increased, but these things are as cheap as they ever were; Shoe polish, elbow grease, soap and water, and whisk brooms.

A good average use of these cheap things will help mightily to solve the cost of living problems.

A Life's Symphony.

William Henry Channing: To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury, and refinement rather than fashion; to be worthy, not respectable, and wealthy, not rich; to study hard, think quietly, talk gently, act frankly; to listen to stars and birds, to babes and sages, with open heart; to hear all cheerfully, do all bravely, wait occasion, hurry never; in a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious, grow up through the common. This is to be my symphony.

AMUSEMENTS

TONIGHT'S ATTRACTIONS.

Tonight's attractions:
LYCTUM—Homer's "Oddysey."
ORPHEUM—Vaudeville.
EMPRESS—Vaudeville.

Amusement Notes.

It it were possible to secure one of the big moving picture films, cut out each photograph separately, it would be possible to wall paper the average home with photographs an inch square.

For instance in Homer's "Odyssey," the latest importation in scenic photoplays, there are over 40,000 individual photographs, which strung out end to end, would cover a mile.

Homer's "Odyssey" is the $200,000 film production made by the Milano company of Italy. They made also Dante's "Inferno." "The Odyssey" is being shown here for a special engagement at the Lyceum theater all this week.

The quaint Scotch comedy, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," which comes to the Lyceum on Monday, April 25, for five days, is full of original sayings quaintly put and full of dry humor. Among them are some admonitions to women, such as these: "Even though ye are plain, dinna be so plain as ye look." "Wummin make a great mistake when thy think a' a man cares about is to see ye looking bonny. It's true he dinna want a wummin around lookin' like a hen that's been out in the rain. No matter how plain ye are, ye maun continue to look attractive enough for a kiss; but it's easy, if ye are a wumman of sense."

The Lyceum will offer its patrons Sunday, matinee and night, "In Wyoming," the well-known western comedy-drama success. Its love story heoric scenes and situations, its dramatic climaxes have thrilled more than a million theater goers, and the whole, as an ensemble has been declared by press and public one of the most refreshing and entertaining offerings to be seen this season.

Carl Demarest, the violinist appearing at the Orpheum this week, is a "Jack-of-all-trades" in the theatrical profession.

Mr. Demarest is a young man, being still under 30 years of age, but he has probably tried more branches of the amusement business than any performer seen at the Orpheum this season.

To begin with he is a musician and has been one since his early youth. He began the study of the violin and the piano when only 5 years of age, and has kept it up almost constantly since that time, even when other work seriously interfered. He looks upon music as his standby, and has never allowed his musical work to be neglected.

He has appeared in the so-called "legitimate," playing what are known as "juvenile roles" with stock companies and road companies.

He has done the "dive to death" at summer fairs and carnivals, tying himself in a sack and diving off a high platform into a shallow tank of water.

He is a slight of hand performer and a juggler, and for one season gave an entertainment of this nature in vaudeville.

He performs what vaudevillians call the "handcuff and safe stuff," which consists of releasing himself from handcuffs and unlocking safes.

He is also a dancer of no mean ability, and once appeared with a "song and dance team." He does some dancing in his present act, while playing the violin.

"But the little old fiddle is the best of all," said Demarest. "I like it best and it brings me the most money, so I have decided to stick to it permanently and study it harder than I ever did before."

Large crowds are attending the Empress daily to witness the remarkable performance of Sa-Hera, whose wonderful feats of mind reading have astonished the theatergoing public of Duluth. Many come because they wish to witness here performance, but many come because they are skeptical and have to be shown. After witnessing Sa-Hera's performance, all are forced to believe that her performance is perfectly legitimate and that she accomplishes some wonderful things. Sa-Hera's style of working is different from that of any act of a similar nature that has appeared in Duluth theaters and she offers a large reward to anyone that can prove that she uses accomplices in any way. Sa-Hera has appeared in every known civilized country and everywhere she has created a sensation. In speaking of her work, Sa-Hera says: "Do I enjoy my work? Well, rather, for I must confess there is a certain satisfaction about being able to baffle thousands of people every day. Of course, it took hours of time and study on my part in order that I might be able to do this, but the study was worth the while and I really enjoy my work."

During the week Sa-Hera has received communications from many of Duluth's prominent business men, who wish her advice regarding certain business matters and wherever possible, she has gladly advised them. Sa-Hera claims nothing supernatural for her offering, merely stating that she accomplishes her work scientifically, but so wonderful is her performance that it almost forces one to believe that she possesses some wonderful power. For the benefit of the women of Duluth who wish to ask questions of a private nature, Sa-Hera will give a special matinee on Friday afternoon, at which time she will answer the questions of women only. An attraction of this nature always arouses considerable interest among the women and in order that all may have their questions answered, Sa-Hera holds this special matinee.

Myra Dietz, the heroine of Cameron Dam, and her brother, Leslie, have proved very popular with the large audiences at the Happy Hour this week. They are telling of their experiences at Cameron before and during the conflict with the state deputies, who attempted to arrest their father for the alleged murder of Bert Horel.

Miss Dietz is a fluent speaker and with the aid of pictures depicting the scenes in and about Cameron Dam, she gives a most interesting talk. Her brother, Leslie, also tells of the various incidents relative to the famous battle between his father and the deputies. They are touring the entire west for the purpose of securing sufficient funds to help defray the expenses of the next trial of John Dietz. They will appear at the Happy Hour each afternoon and evening for the rest of the week.

THINKS ICEBERG WAS SUBMERGED

Robert Hair, representing a French line of ocean steamers, was in the city today, calling on local railroad men.

Mr. Hair says that he imagines that the accident to the Titanic could be likened to the cracking of a nut.

He states that when the big liner hit the iceberg her bow must have burst open in much the same manner as that of a nut when it is cracked.

Mr. Hair says that the iceberg must have been almost totally submerged and that the captain or the officer in charge could not have sighted it in time to stop the boat.

WIRELESS MESSAGES NOT HEARD HERE

The local wireless station has caught no messages during the past twenty-four hours regarding the Titanic disaster Monday morning. Those in charge of the local station are unable to get in communication with Port Arthur at present.

The local station works within a radius of a few hundred miles, and it is only on rare occasions that messages are caught from a point as far distant as the Atlantic coast.

OROZCO MAKING HIS LAST STAND

Duluthian Receives Letter From Friend in Mexican Rebel District.

It is not safe for Americans to visit the part of Mexico in which Orozco holds sway.

Dwight Woodbridge has received a letter from a friend in Mexico, a prominent Spaniard, in which all Americans are strongly advised or warned to remain out of that part of Mexico known as the "Orozco district." This is that domain of strife where the operations of the rebel leader have been the most active.

"I do not think it safe for Americans in the 'Orozco district' at present," writes Woodbridge's friend. "I think Orozco is making his last stand and is trying to antagonize Americans in order to force American intervention. He would then appeal to the patriotism of the Mexican people and ask for a union of forces to face a common foe.

"Such an action would relieve his present plight. I cannot imagine where he will be when his time comes. Americans certainly will not defend him, nor will Mexicans."

Health and Beauty Helps

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

K. B.: Regardless of your age, I would not recommend the use of face powder. It clogs the skin's pores and in time will make your complexion rough and anything but handsome. The best kind of a beautifier is made by dissolving 4 ounces of spurmax in ½ pint of witch hazel (or hot water), adding 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. This will whiten and refine your skin. It takes away that oily, shiny look better than powder and does not show or rub off so easily. This lotion will clear your complexion and give to it a wholesome, charming tone, also affording the skin splendid protection from chapping in the wind.

Mrs. F. B.: To have a head of perfect hair you must keep your scalp absolutely clean and free from dandruff. If you will shampoo twice a month with a teaspoonful of canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water, rinsing thoroughly with clear water, you will find your hair will always be fluffy, bright and clean. This shampoo is so far superior to others that the best class of hairdressers use it almost exclusively. It makes the hair dry quickly without any signs of streaking, brittleness or other bad effects which are caused by using soap. There is nothing like it for removing dandruff, cleansing the hair and giving to it that much-desired fluffiness and brilliance.

C. P.: Your pimples, sallowness and hollow cheeks are due to a run-down condition of the body. The only way to remove these ills is to clear your blood of its impurities. Dissolve one ounce kardene and ½ cupful sugar in ¼ pint alcohol, then add hot water to make a quart. Take a tablespoonful before each meal. This is a splendid system tonic and will soon restore the look of perfect health to your face, fill out your cheeks and give you the energy and ambition which only a healthy person has. It is a wonderful blood-purifier, energizer and liver regulator.

M. D.: You can make your hair grow in thick and abundant by rubbing into the scalp twice a week the following tonic: Mix together ½ pint of alcohol, 1 ounce quinzoin and ½ pint cold water. This will show better results in a short time than all the "hair-growers" on the market put together. Oils and vaseline really do very little good but this tonic will be a most pleasant surprise to you in its beneficial results. It removes dandruff, stops scalp-irritation and checks falling hair almost instantly.

Miss G. G.: You will find nothing as good to strengthen your weak eyes, clear them of redness and make them brilliant and beautiful as this simple eye tonic: Dissolve an ounce of crystos in a pint of water and put a few drops in each eye twice a day. Many very successful oculists recommend this fine tonic owing to its great merit. There is nothing better for treating granulated lids and it acts very quickly.

Mrs. E.: It is a very simple matter to remove every trace of hair from your chin. Make a paste with a little powdered delatone and water, then spread on hairy surface and in two or three minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs will have vanished. This is a painless and certain way in which to banish hairy growths.

Mrs. M.: Do not cut the eye-lashes. Instead, apply a little pyroxin to lash-roots with thumb and forefinger and they will grow in silky and long. Thin eyebrows can be made to grow in thick and long if you apply pyroxin each night with the forefinger. Use caution and do not get any pyroxin where hair is not wanted.

Juani: The cost of fat-reduction need not be high. If you will buy 4 ounces of parnotis and dissolve it in 1¼ pints hot water, you have the best and safest fat-remedy known. Take a tablespoonful before meals and your excess fat will soon be gone. No dieting or violent exercises are necessary and your skin will remain smooth and unwrinkled. Parnotis is absolutely harmless and has worked wonders where other remdies failed.

A. L. M.: I do not like to recommend any of the prepared cold creams, as most of them are too greasy and are likely to cause hair to grow on your skin. Try this: Stir 1 ounce [illegible] and 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine into cold water. This will make an excellent cream that will cleanse the skin and keep it smooth, velvety and free from chapping. It will keep your complexion radiant, perfectly clear and free from blackheads and wrinkles.

CAMPAIGN FOR NEW CLUBHOUSE

Adams Association Members Will Make Their Plans Next Friday.

Members of the Adams Athletic association will meet Friday evening, April 26 to make plans for the new clubhouse subscription campaign.

As announced in Saturday evening's Herald, plans have already been drawn for a two-story clubhouse to be built in this end of the city. The building will cost about $15,000 and will be one of the best athletic structures in this part of the country.

Organized but three years ago with five charter members, the organization now has seventy-five active members, with a waiting list of twenty-five. The club has won several football and baseball championships during its existence and has also stood prominent in the various other branches of summer and winter sports.

Axel Erickson, who was one of the five charter members of the association, was its first president. He also played a prominent part in the various branches of sports in which the club has entered and has acted as manager in several capacities. John Geistman is president of the club this year. The other officers this year are: Kl Gauntlier, vice president; H. Otterson, secretary, and Axel Erickson, treasurer.

At the meeting a week from tomorrow evening the members will form the plans for the general subscription campaign. Committees are to be appointed to work the various sections of the city. A membership campaign will also be started and efforts will be made by the members to bring the present membership up to 200.

CROWD FILLS NEW DEPARTMENT STORE.

Several times the "W. O." (wait outside), sign had to be hung up at the Weum department store, 2106-8 West Superior street, during the day yesterday. The new department store opened its sixteen-day introduction sale yesterday morning and hundreds of West end residents flocked to the store during the day to purchase the many bargains on sale.

The Weum department store, which is one of a chain of stores scattered throughout Minnesota, North and South Dakota, is the successor to the Emma Johnson store. Mrs. Johnson sold her store, fixtures and good will for $40,000. The new management will continue the present sale for the next two weeks, when a new line of summer goods will be placed on sale. The store has been leased until May 1, 1914. About fifty clerks are employed in the store during the present sale.

INDORSE PROPOSED CHARTER AMENDMENTS.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Men's Welfare League of the Swedish Mission church, Twenty-first avenue west and Second street, last evening, the members unanimously indorsed the initiative, referendum and recall amendments, which will come up at the special election on May 7.

The following social service committee, which has been making an investigation of the new charter amendments the past two weeks, recommended their passage to the members of the league last evening: Fred W. Erickson, Charles Mork, John Linn, Emil Nyberg and Axel Johnson. The committee was instructed to make arrangements for a general mass meeting a few days before the special election, at which several speakers will be asked to address the members.

Plans were made for holding the first banquet of the organization. The affair will be for the members only and will be held on Wednesday evening, May 15.

The scene of the production is laid in the Grove House academy for girls and shows an entertainment which the young girls are planning to give. The feature of the evening is to be a burlesque on "Cinderella and the Slipper," and the first act shows the girls rehearsing their parts, with the humorous incidents evident in amateur theatricals brought out in the comic dress rehearsal. WILL STUDY LOWLY HEN

Poultry School Which Will Open Monday, Already Has Big Enrollment.

Prizes Will Be Awarded in Children's Contest April 27.

Prof. N. E. Chapman of the extension department of the University of Minnesota will open the second annual poultry school at the Y. M. C. A. audience room at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. The sessions will be held each afternoon and evening and Prof. Chapman will be assisted in the sessions by A. B. Hostetter, agricultural expert of the Commercial club.

There are fifty-five poultry fanciers who have already signed to take this special course in chicken raising. Others who will assist Prof. Chapman are Prof. C. E. Brown of the Crookston agricultural school and Prof. W. A. Matthews of the University farm. The former assisted Prof. Chapman during the course last year.

Those who took the course last year will be taught special advanced work this year. The others are to begin the work in the course and take a different subject each day. The entire course costs $2 and the various text books, note books and stationery will be furnished free of charge. Last year the students were given books and stationery to the value of $4.50, after paying but $2 for the course of study.

The poultry contest for boys and girls, which was inaugurated last year by the Y. M. C. A., will come to an end Saturday morning, April 27, when the prizes will be awarded by Prof. Chapman and his assistants. The young boys and girls who entered the contest will bring the various birds they raised during the year. Contributions for the prizes were made by the Duluth Commercial club, the Duluth Poultry association and the Y. M. C. A.

Other prizes will be given to the boy or girl who writes the best account of not more than 500 words about the various poultry features they noticed during the year. The various methods employed by the youthful poultry fanciers are to be featured in these prize articles, which will be published some time in May.

Another feature for the morning of April 27 will be a novel contest for the boys and girls of Duluth. The exact nature of the contest will not be given out, as it is to be a surprise to the contestants. During this week and next week Prof. Chapman will visit the various grade and high schools of the city to interest the pupils in poultry work.

TO PETITION FOR CHANGE IN ROUTE

Cass Lake and Walker Commercial Clubs Will Appeal to War Department.

Cass Lake, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—As a result of a meeting held here of members of the Walker Commercial club and the local Commercial club, an appeal will be sent to the war department asking that the route of the proposed government canal from Winnibigoshish to Leech lake be changed so it will run from Pike bay, an arm of Cass lake, to Steamboat lake and thence via Steamboat lake to Leech lake.

The joint meeting of the clubs which was held here last night resulted from it becoming known here yesterday by the visit of E. J. Dugan, government engineer, that because of low water at Winnibigoshish the work on the proposed Winnibigoshish-Leech lake canal had been called off this year.

Word was sent to Walker and met with hearty response, nine members of the Walker club, headed by Mayor Kinkle, arriving on the evening train.

Joint Committees Named.

After full discussion of the matter, it was decided that both the Cass Lake and Walker clubs should appoint committees to immediately draft resolutions asking the war department to change the route of the canal and urge the building of the dam upon congress.

The following committees were appointed to draft such resolutions: For the Cass Lake Commercial club, Julius Neils, George Lydick and M. N. Koll; for the Walker Commercial club, Charles Kinkele, Dan De Lury and F. A. Dare. The resolutions, which will be extensive, will be prepared and forwarded to Congressman Lindbergh within the next few days after being submitted to both clubs for adoption.

CONVICT DEBATERS TO MEET SOLDIERS

Novel Discussion in Debating Line Planned at North Dakota Penitentiary.

Bismarck, N. D., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—A debate between convicts of the state penitentiary here and the soldiers from Fort Lincoln, near here, will be pulled off under the direction of the Prison Brotherhood, of which Bert Conroy, a bank breaker, is the president.

This debate was scheduled to take place last week, but the arrangements were not complete and the event was postponed. The two institutions, the fort and the prison, have picked their crack debaters for the unusual contest.

MISSING YOUTH IS LOCATED IN FARGO.

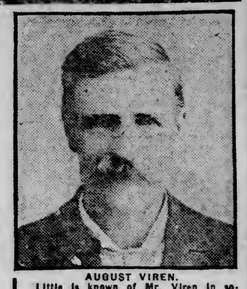
Bismarck, N. D., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—James Kannady, the young man for whom his mother instituted a search, addressing Coroner Fields of this city, has been located. He left here three weeks ago and is now in Fargo, and it is expected that he will communicate with his anxious mother immediately.

Kannady spent the entire winter in Bismarck, and just why he had failed to notify his mother of his whereabouts is not known.

THE BUSY, PROSPEROUS, WEST END

CHAS. JOHNSON JOEL JOHNSON.

Johnson Bros., butchers, at 2516 West Third street, were the first to recognize the needs of the West End people and establish a cash meat market in this community, which has proven so saving to their hundreds of patrons, that their business has grown so rapidly that they are now negotiating for larger quarters.



The Johnson Bros'. market or the Lincoln Park Cash market, which it is called, is always clean and sanitary and the high quality of their meats has received many compliments from housekeepers and government inspectors. Their business is not confined entirely to the West End, as people from all over the city trade with them. Cash always insures quality and lower prices, which has been a great power in their success. The Johnson Bros. always see that their customers get the best. They are good boosters for the West End and it will not be long before you will see the largest meat business in the city bear the name, Johnson Bros., butchers.

THE CENTER of Duluth's population lies between 16th and 40th avenues West; in that part of the city known as the WEST END.

¶Here, in their thousands, are found the homes of the well-to-do workers; and the greatest of Duluth's fine factories and mighty mills.

¶Herefrom, the manufactured product of forest, harvest field, and mine is shipped to the uttermost corners of the earth.

¶Here also, are found many of Duluth's ablest and most prosperous business men; from whose untiring efforts in the past, the WEST END has drawn much of her present prosperity; and to whom she looks even more for the future prosperity that is to be hers.

AUGUST VIREN.

Little is known of Mr. Viren in society or political circles, but in the business world he is a familiar figure and a consistent booster for a Greater West End. The firm of Viren & Swanson, grocers, at 2330 West Third street, of which he is senior member, maintains a name for carrying a very choice line of Fancy and Staple Groceries. For years housewives have attested to the high quality of their goods. Their store always has an assortment of everything in delacies for the table and it would give anyone an appetite to step in and see everything looking so neat, clean and tempting. You would wonder how they can sell so cheap and handle such a fancy line of goods, but it is on account of the large volume of business done on the small profit system and their trade is constantly on the increase. Messrs. Viren & Swanson are justly entitled to a great deal of credit for their beautiful store, their fancy line of groceries and excellent service and deserve a share of the patronage of everyone

BRUCE'S COLUMN

COMMENT AND DIVERS DISCUSSION OF THE MERRY WORLD OF SPORT.

JAMES COFFORTH, one of the biggest and most successful fight promoters in the world, claims that he has the promise of Jim Jeffries to make one more fight and that the fight will be made before the club of the San Francisco man. After the affair of Reno this is too much. As yet the American fight public has not taken the belief of Jim Flynn that he is going to beat the negro at all seriously; but if the truth were known it would be shown that Flynn has more chance of beating Johnson, no matter how good that chance is, than Jeffries has of coming back and beating one single good man. Nature is a grand institution. Nature will go far before it will rebel against the supercilious and gross ignorance of mere man. James J. Jeffries was one of the greatest physical marvels that was ever given to the athletic world. So great was Jeffries that the sledge hammer blows of Fitzsimmons, perhaps the hardest hitter that the world of fighters ever witnessed, failed to stagger the hairy giant from the state of the Golden West. But Jeffries is gross and his tastes were for the things evil. Disease wore away the wonderful vitality of the physical marvel. Liquor and laziness placed him in such shape that he was forced to go to the most famous medicated mineral watering place of all Europe before he could even think of going through the farce of training before the fight with Johnson.

Rumors now and then whisper that Jeffries is training in the mountains of California. Shrewd followers of fighters are of the opinion that Jeffries will never be anything that requires strength and speed and the stamina of the athlete; and therefore this talk of the return of the Lochinvar from out of the West is something to be smiled at in the deepest derision.

There is no question but that Flynn is tough. He is also faster than some of us were aware; and yet he is so small beside the giant who at the present time holds the title of champion of the world, that it seems impossible that he can ever steal the crown from the head of the negro.

But Jeffries. It is the case of the cheese factory on fire. There is no chance in the world, despite some of the talk of Cofforth. Jeff traded the greatest physical inheritance of all fighters since the dawn of pugilism for a mess of red pottage, and he must sup the dregs of the deep draught of might-have-been isms.

TONIGHT the entire Northwest will look with interest to Duluth for the result of the Jarvinen-Lehto contest. To far away England, the home of Jarvinen and the former home of Karl Lehto, the news of the match will be cabled and bulletined, for the fans of Finland are waiting eagerly for the news of the deciding of the championship of the Finnish people. Finnish people are here from the Copper country, from the ranges and from all the towns near Duluth; the event is one that looms large in the interest of the Finnish speaking population of the entire world.

Some of the Finnish newspaper men are here to cover the result of this long agitated meeting. Bulletin service will be maintained between the Auditorium and the telegraph offices and almost every move of the struggling gladiators will be told over the wires to the two big Finnish daily newspapers of the Copper country, there to be shouted by megaphone to the crowd of interested listeners who have been unable to attend the contest.

Lehto comes confident of being able to retain the championship he has proudly held among the people of his race. Jarvinen comes with confidence even greater than Lehto. This young giant is positive in the belief that there are but three or four wrestlers in the world who can defeat him. Unbeaten through hundreds of amateur contests on the other side of the broad Atlantic, his confidence has been many times increased by his victories in America and his remarkable stand against the great Cutler.

Ilia Vincent, the wonderful Cuban wrestler, who, by some astute followers of the wrestling game is classed with the wonderful Gama, the dark-skinned champion of all that mystic and mysterious East India, says Jarvinen has the making of one of the greatest wrestlers in the world. The big Cuban says he need fear no American wrestler with several more months of instruction in the science of the catch-as-catch-can game.

Lehto believes that he can beat Jarvinen at the modern game of wrestling. Lehto frankly admits that he never could hope to beat Jarvinen at the Graeco-Roman game, and there are few men in the world who can. But the former Duluth man says at the catch-as-catch-can game he will prove the master of the young giant from the other side of the water and will show his Duluth admirers that he has learned much of the American style of grappling in the year that he has been absent.

Some followers of the sport say that Jarvinen is the greatest Finnish wrestler in the world. These same friends are of the opinion that the contest this evening will amply bear out this belief. Others are loyal to Lehto. These men say he is faster, heavier and more skillful. It is after all the difference of opinion that makes the chief interest in this mundane sphere. There is a decided difference of opinion regarding the outcome of the title match of this evening, and there is the precise accounting for the wonderful amount of interest that the contest has awakened.

TURBY SPENCER is the most reinstated man in the history of the national game, less it be that his record is surpassed by the eccentric Rube Waddell. Word from Louisville is that Manager Jack Tighe of the Colonels has placed the big catcher back on the list of the forgiven if not forgotten. Mike Kelley of the Apostles has one of those sweet and confiding dispositions that has made the genial and cordial manager of the St. Paul team one of the best liked men in the United States Michael tried everything to reform the gross-grained spirit and well-like thirst of Spencer. He failed and gave up the job as one helpless and hopeless. The worst part of it is that the fat Spencer is one of the greatest catchers in the business.

Yes, that is the worst of it. It is always a shame when an athlete goes bad, a great athlete. There was Stanley Ketchel and there have been others. Genius is peculiar and erratic. There is Rube Waddell and it was only his wonderful ability that got him by. Spencer may be on the sprinkling cart for a month or perhaps two; but if he plays true to form he will be going under a leeward lurch just about the time the race gets warm and his services are the most badly needed. Nettlesome person, that boy.

WITH the incorporation of the local baseball association there is the belief that this year is going to give to Duluth the best ball that the fans have ever had. On the eve of a tremendous growth, facing a year of prosperity, it is meet and proper that this summer we reorganize our system of baseball, this applying to fans as well as the behavior of the team, and that all of us get into the game. Duluth is ambitious in the baseball line, or at least she should be, and this summer something should be accomplished.

TEAM MANAGERS ARE ANNOUNCED

Leaders for United States League Clubs Have Been Decided Upon.

Chicago, April 18. — William C. Niesen, owner of the Chicago franchise in the new United States baseball league, has returned from a league meeting held in Pittsburg and announced that managers for the eight clubs had been selected. Play in the organization will begin May 1.

Following is the list of managers: Chicago, Bert Keeley; Cleveland, Jack O'Connor, formerly manager of the St. Louis Americans; Pittsburg, "Deacon" Phillippe, formerly a Pittsburg pitcher; Washington, George Bowne, formerly with the Chicago and New York National league clubs; Richmond, E. C. Langraft; Cincinnati, Hugh McKennon; Reading, Leo Groom; New York, William Jordon.

Niesen explained that the United States league was not an "outlaw" organization. He said none of the players in organized ball would be tampered with and that teams would be recruited from college and independent teams not in conflict with the national commission.

Shift in Sox Line-up.

Chicago, April 18.—Before leaving for St. Louis last night Manager Callahan of the Chicago American league club, announced that Matty McIntyre, veteran outfielder, would replace Walter Mattick, a recruit, in right field. This is Callahan's first shift in the line-up since the opening of the season. Mattick will be retained as utility outfielder.

SCENE WILL BE IN NEW MEXICO

Johnson and Flynn Will Go Forty-Five Rounds at Las Vegas.

Chicago, April 18.—Jack Johnson and Jim Flynn will fight forty-five rounds for the world's heavyweight championship at Las Vegas, N. M., on the afternoon of July 4, according to announcement made last night by Jack Curley, promoter of the contest. Final plans for staging the match were made here yesterday.

"I received a bonus for bringing the fight to Las Vegas," said Curley, "but it wasn't big enough to talk about. The bonus merely will be used to defray the cost of constructing the arena."

Work of constructing the arena, Curley said, would begin May 1. Both Flynn and Johnson have agreed to be on the scene of the contest a month before the fight. Curley said Johnson already had begun light training and that Flynn would start active work as soon as he finished his theatrical contracts.

Tripp Fight Bill Passed.

Santa, Fe, N. M., April 18.—The house yesterday passed the Tripp prize fight bill by a vote of 29 to 17. The measure permits forty-five-round contests which legalizes the proposed Johnson-Flynn fight at Las Vegas on July 4.

MANY UNABLE TO PLAY BASEBALL

University of Minnesota May Not Have a Ball Team This Spring.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 18.—Whether the University of Minnesota is to have a baseball team this spring probably is to be decided at an adjourned meeting of the eligibility committee of the university to be held next Friday.

According to Prof. James Paige, head of the committee, the Minnesota's representative in the big eight conference, of the approximately thirty men who were examined as to their eligibility, many will not be able to play baseball.

"We simply took statements yesterday," said Mr. Paige last night, "and will pass upon the men Friday. I think that we will have a team—such as it is—but there are many who will not be able to play under the conference rule."

The student council Friday also will announce the result of the student vote as to whether Minnesota shall remain a member of the conference. It is said the vote so far has been in favor of withdrawal.

Pitcher Gehring Is Dead.

Kansas City, Mo., April 18.—Henry Gehring, 31 years old, a pitcher for the Kansas City American association baseball team, died here last night after a short illness. Gehring pitched for St. Paul last year and in 1907 was a member of the Washington American league team.

Henry Gehring, the pitcher whose death is reported today, was one of the best pitchers ever developed here and was for some years afterward a star in the American association. The dead player had his trial in the majors, just falling short of the qualifications of a star. In addition to his pitching ability he was an excellent all round player. Mike Kelley thought very highly of "Hank" Gehring.

WRESTLERS AWAIT THE CLANG OF THE GONG

Lehto and Jarvinen Ready for Contest for the World's Finnish Championship.

A world's title hangs upon the result of tonight's wrestling match.

Karl Lehto, recognized as the holder of the catch-as-catch can title among the Finnish people, will defend his title in the match with Alex Jarvinen, who has traveled several thousand miles to battle for the honor.

To the winner will go the spoils as well as the title. The contract that has been signed by the representatives of the two wrestlers says that two thirds of the big purse will be paid to the winner. The contract further says that under no circumstances will a draw be considered. One of the men will emerge from the contest with the clear right to the championship.

Gust Friland, manager of Jarvinen, says that this match will prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that the young Finnish giant is one of the best wrestlers in the country. Followers of Lehto from the Copper country and the range believe in the ability of Karl and are proclaiming his superiority.

Range fans and the big colony of Copper country lovers of wrestling are of the opinion that Lehto will be returned the winner. Duluth fans of all nationalities are of the firm opinion that Jarvinen will wrest the championship from the sturdy young fellow of Hancock. The remarkable showing Jarvinen made on his initial appearance here has won him a large local following.

Lehto will weigh, according to the telegram sent by him, just 193 pounds. Jarvinen will scale at about 207. Lehto is short and of great bredth of shoulders and depth of chest. He is built along the wrestling lines of little Freddy Beell. Jarvinen has immense shoulders and a powerful back, with a tapering waist and the thighs of a sprinter.

This match might be compared to a struggle between a bear and huge panther. Both men possess wonderful development of the neck; both are experts in bridging.

The winning of the contest will mean fame and money to the winner. He will be the idol of his countrymen.

Walter Willoughby will not appear in the preliminaries, a long distance wire from Mellen, Wis., last night stating that he broke a rib in his match with Paul Domke of Sioux City, the contest going but twelve minutes when the injury put Willoughby out of the running.

Louis Zorbas, Sailor Jack, Walter Nesgoda and Billy Harvey will make up the two preliminaries. According to the officials of the club, the preliminaries will be fast and snappy, clearing the ring early for the big match of the evening.

OARSMEN WILL START WATER WORK SATURDAY

(BY BRUCE.)

Coach Jimmy Ten Eyck of the Duluth Boat club expects to have his crew candidates out on the water by Saturday. At the present time the coach is suffering from the grip and has not been able to get out with the men.

Some of the oarsmen have been out in the lapstreaks. But on Saturday, if James recovers from the last remnants of winter's discontent, he expects to formally start off the rowing season with several crews and the eight as it will be made up at the start of the rowing season.

With Kent, Thompson, Lathrop, Thorburn, Sole, Quimby, Paddock and Dugan of the regulars and reliables back, the prospects of the crew would seem to be of the best. In addition to these men Hare and Mahan will be here later on.

There are a number of new men that the coach thinks highly of. Any new man that makes the eight will have to be very good, as the veterans are there in sufficient numerical strength to fill all those cute little seats, for you know there are but eight of them, even though the old shell is very long.

With the Ten Eyck system showing construction work around the corner stone of the first year's celebration, progress is expected from the very start of the water work. James proved his worth in his first season here; this year he is expected to produce one of the best eights that have ever left the stake boats in the N. W. L. regattas.

Early in May, according to the program the coach laid out sometime ago, the men will start on the little-two-per day trips up and down the old bay. The boys are doped to sleep, eat and dream of—well, rowing—at the quarters of the club. Calling and soft music and big eyes and chocolate creams are fine—but Ten Eyck says eeverything has its little place, and that the curfew's sweet chimes will find the huskies telling Jack and Bill Nevell to "call us in time to get the first boat."

Ten Eyck's regime is to be one filled with the gentle iron of discipline. Ben Franklin's advice regarding the early to the hay and out with the rooster and the aqua-milk distributers, is to be played for a headline act.

With the prospects great, the season is expected to be started right royally out on the old bay, and some time in July a lot of enthusiastic young men with D. B. C. ribbons on their hats are confidently expected to be standing on the festive bank and giving a first-class imitation of men crazed and justly excited—yes, quite so; Duluth is expected to cop this season.

The new boats will be here soon. The new men will be placed in the lapstreaks for a while. There is a goodly wealth of new men out and the weeding will require time.

ONE GAME PLAYED ON WEDNESDAY

Rain and Muck Causes Standstill in Three Big Leagues.

But one game was played in the three big leagues yesterday. New York beat Boston at Boston by a score of 4 to 1. Rain prevented games at ten other cities and a wreck prevented the Chicago-Cincinnati game at Cincinnati.

WOLGAST GOING TO FIGHT SOON

Los Angeles, Cal., April 18.—Ad Wolgast, champion lightweight, has accumulated $137,500 in the two years since he won the title. Here are Wolgast's own figures: Cash on hand in Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco banks, $90,000; value of Cadillac ranch property, $17,000; diamonds, $10,000; four houses at Venice, $15,500; two automobiles, $5,000; total, $137,500.

"I'm going to fight a four-round battle in San Francisco on May 4 with some good boy to try myself out," said Wolgast Tuesday night. "I want to see if I can take a punch. This tryout will be my only appearance in the ring until I go after Joe Rivers in July.

"After the Rivers fight I'll take on the bunch as fast as they come at me. I'll never retire so long as I hold the title, but will keep on fighting until I get a kick that lands me on the floor."

CARNEY SLATED FOR WINNIPEG

St. Paul, April 18. — William Carney of St. Paul, familiarly known as "Wild Bill" a handle tacked to his moniker while he was pitching for the Minneapolis club several years ago, will manage the Winnipeg club in the newly organized Central International league.

Carney has had many years' experience in baseball, and was a pitcher of no mean ability a few seasons ago. For the past four or five years he has been managing clubs in class B and C leagues. He also has done considerable umpiring, and for a time last season was a member of President Chivington's staff.

The Central International league will be a six-club organization composed of the following towns: Superior, Duluth, Virginia, Winnipeg, Fargo and Grand Forks. "Kid" Taylor and Darby O'Brien will again handle the reins of the Twin Ports, while Jack Corrigan, formerly with Rochester and last season pilot of the Watertown club in the South Dakota league, will be at Grand Forks. Both Artie O'Dea and Perry Werden have been spoken of as probable choice of the Virginia club owners as leader.

The new league is the outgrowth of the factional fight in the Minny circuit. The Twin Ports for some time have been wanting to withdraw from the organization and get into some other league of higher ranking.

Lew Drill, formerly a pitcher of the St. Paul club, now practicing law here, will likely be offered the presidency of the new organization.

Time Set for Meeting.

May 14 has been set for the regular annual meeting of the Duluth Boat club. The meeting will be held as usual in the big room of the main house. A smoker and original entertainment will follow the election of officers and the completion of the business of the evening. Officers of the club look forward to a very prosperous and successful season at the various branches of the boat club.

Manager Dahlen Suspended.

New York, April 18.—President Lynch of the National league suspended Manager William Dahlen of the Brooklyn club for three days because he had protested last Saturday's game over a decision by one of the umpires.

Sporting Man Dies.

Cincinnati, Ohio, April 18.—Billy McCreary, widely known sporting man, died at the City hospital here yesterday following injuries received several months ago, when he fell down the stairs in his apartments. At one time he was wealthy, but he died practically penniless.

Brown Is Confident.

Pal Brown, the fighter, was in the city yesterday. He is on his way to Columbus to fight Battling Schultz, a tough and hardy mixer of the third rate class. Pal expects to win by the nursery route and then believes he will have the opportunity of clashing with Phil Harrison, the sensational Chicago fighter. Brown called on "Doc" McNulty and "Doc" Hoppman.

Costello Knocked Out.

Bartlesville, Okla., April 18.—With a terrific blow to the stomach Clarence (Wildcat) Ferns of Kansas City, claimant of the welterweight championship, knocked out Eddie Costello of Brooklyn, N. Y., in the fourth round of a scheduled fifteen-round bout here last night. It was the first time Costello had ever been knocked out.

FAVORS FEDERAL AID.

Governor Hadley of Missouri Talks About Highways.

Kansas City, Mo., April 18.—Government aid in the building of trans-continental highways was favored by Governor Hadley of Missouri in an address to the convention of the National Old Trails Road association here.

"The question of good country roads is more important that of freight rates" said Governor Hadley. "More money is paid by the people for transportating goods over the roads than is paid for railroads and river transportation. Good roads will turn back the drift of the people seeking the cities and will again populate the rural districts. Get one trans-continental highway built and the people will be eager for more."

States as far east as Ohio and as far west as Arizona, were represented at the meeting.

CANADA'S BRIEF ON THE CHICAGO PLAN FILED.

Washington, April 18. — Secretary Stimson has received through Consul Mullen, special counsel for the Canadian government, a brief setting forth its objections to the application of the city of Chicago for permission to increase the amount of water to be diverted from Lake Michigan into the drainage canal.

The document consists of an elaboration of many objections advanced by the Canadian mercantile and shipping interests in the hearing a fortnight ago. It has been referred to Gen. Bixby, chief of engineers, for analysis and report, after which the secretary of war will reconsider the whole case with a view to a final determination.

Healthy Mothers

Women who bear children and remain healthy are those who prepare their systems in advance of baby's coming. Unless the mother aids nature in its pre-natal work the crisis finds her system unequal to the demands made upon it, and she is often left with weakened health or chronic ailments. No remedy is so truly a help to nature as Mother's Friend, and no expectant mother should fail to use it. It relieves the pain and discomfort caused by the strain on the ligaments, makes pliant and elastic those fibres and muscles which nature is expanding, prevents numbness of limbs, and soothes the inflammation of breast glands. The system being thus prepared by Mother's Friend dispels the fear that the crisis may not be safely met. Mother's Friend assures a speedy and complete recovery for the mother, and she is left a healthy woman to enjoy the rearing of her child. Mother's Friend is sold at drug stores. All the mills expect a long season, probably running until the freeze up next fall. There are plenty of logs in sight at present and many more will be brought in by rail over the Duluth & Northeastern road. BIG PENNINGTON CROPS.

New County Promises to Break Records This Year.

Thief River Falls, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—Seeding in Pennington county is general. Wheat will all be in the ground by the end of this week and breaking for flax will then begin. A great acreage of potatoes and corn will be planted, but reliable seed is hard to secure.

The prospects are very promising for a bumper crop. In case these hopes are fulfilled there will be need for several more elevators in this city. WILL SEEK REHEARING.

Attorney General Not Satisfied With Assessors' Enrolling Decision.

Bismarck, N. D., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—Attorney General Miller is not satisfied with the decision of the supreme court that the assessor enrollment law of North Dakota is constitutional, and he has announced that he will petition the court for a rehearing. In his petition he will set up several new points in connection with the question, urging that the present law, under which the assessors of the state are at work enrolling the voters, is unconstitutional.

North Dakota assessors are not having much trouble securing the enrollment, as the voters have become quite thoroughly familiar with the proposition, and the task of the men charged with the duty of getting the names has been reduced to the minimum through that fact. In some instances, of course, there has been opposition, and considerable explanation has been necessary. The whole situation, however, is much better than expected.

CLOQUET Y. M. C. A. BOYS ENTERTAIN AS MINSTRELS.

Cloquet, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—The boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. gave two very excellent performances of their minstrel show, and deserved a much better house than greeted them, its comparative smallness being due to other attractions. The show was directed by J. R. Medley and the boys showed their six weeks of training. They numbered about thirty-five and were staged in the opening act with splendid effect. It is probable that the minstrel show will be an annual affair, as this is the second annual show that has been given and very successfully.

HAGUE TO FIX LAWS OF SEA

Suggestion Is Made By North German Lloyd's General Manager.

Von Helmuth Says Steamship Companies Would Like Such a Plan.

New York, April 18.—In a statement issued by Charles von Helmuth, general manager for the North German Lloyd Steamship company, the belief is expressed that the laws of nations concerning the safety of passengers on steamships, which now are at variance, should be referred to The Hague tribunal, which might adopt such regulations as would insure as near absolute safety as is possible, and under which all steamship companies would be compelled to operate.

Mr. von Helmuth says that his line on a trip from Germany to New York must conform to the maritime regulations of four different countries—Germany, Great Britain, France and the United States—all of which are at variance.

While declaring that all the steamship companies obey to the letter all the legal requirements and in most cases exceed them, Mr. von Helmuth declared that nevertheless the situation requires an international agreement.

Suitable for the Hague.

"Certainly," he says, "the safety of human life is vastly of more importance than the settlement of sealing rights or of boundary disputes, which subjects were so skillfully handled at the Dutch capital.

"The Hague tribunal is peculiarly fitted to deal with this situation. The interests of the various countries are so closely interwoven that it is hard to differentiate between their legal requirements. Thus could The Hague tribunal formulate recommendations which would carefully cover every point now contained in the laws of the different countries.

"The steamship companies, I know, would gladly co-operate to the fullest extent in carrying out any idea or project which would make for greater safety at sea."

SAYS BOAT WENT CLEAR TO BOTTOM

Prof. Wood of Johns Hopkins Thinks No Bodies Will Rise.

Baltimore, Md., April 18.—"The bodies of the victims of the Titanic are at the bottom of the deep, never to leave it," Prof. Cobert W. Wood of the chair of experimental physics of Johns Hopkins university, said. "It is improbable that any of the corpses will ever return to the surface, as in the case with bodies drowned in shallow water. At the depth of two miles the pressure of the water is something like 6,000 pounds to the square inch, which is far too great to be overcome by buoyancy ordinarily given drowned bodies by the gases generated in time.

"That the bodies sank to the bottom of the sea there is no question. The Titanic's victims who were not carried down with the boat followed until the very bottom of the sea was reached. There was no such thing as their stopping in their downward course at a half mile, a mile or at any other point.

Compartments Crumpled.

"Great changes have necessarily been wrought in the vessel itself by the enormous pressure to which it has been subjected. No effect was produced on any portion, or compartment, or room to whose inside as well as outside walls the water had access. In such instances the pressure from one side neutralized that from the other.

"But wherever there was airtight compartment, the 6,000 pounds to a square inch pressure of water has crumpled those walls of the vessel as if they were tissue paper."

WOMAN REPORTED DEAD IS ABOARD CARPATHIA.

New York, April 18.—A wireless message was received last evening by relatives of Mrs. Edgar Meyer, daughter of the late Andrew Saks, reporting that she is among the survivors on board the Carpathia. Her name was not included in the list of survivors. Her husband, who is vice president of a copper company, was not rescued.

The wireless message from the Carpathia via Halifax is not signed and reads:

"Leela safe. Well cared for. Edgar missing.

When Vice President Franklin of the White Star line was told the contents of this message, he exclaimed:

"My, gentlemen, I hope that's true. Then perhaps others have been saved."

Mr. Franklin had appeared extremely depressed throughout the afternoon but this message from an outside source caused him to brighten up considerably.

MEMORIAL MEETING IN NEW YORK SUNDAY.

New York, April 18.—A memorial mass meeting will be held Sunday night at a Broadway theater to adopt resolutions of condolence for the families of those who lost their lives on the Titanic, and take action looking to international regulation of ocean travel. The meeting will be under the chairmanship of Frederick Townsend Martin, society leader and welfare worker, who has been assured of the co-operation of prominent clergymen, city officials and other men of prominence.

KINGS AND CARDINALS EXPRESS SYMPATHY.

Washington, April 18.—President Taft has received cablegrams from the king and queen of England and the king of Belgium, conveying their sympathies to the American people in the sorrows which have followed the Titanic disaster.

The many expressions of grief to reach President Taft included one signed jointly by the three American cardinals, who are here attending the meeting of the trustees of the Catholic university.

FORCE OF BLOW TO THE TITANIC EQUAL TO CONCENTRATED FIRE OF THREE DREADNOUGHTS

Washington, April 18.—A graphic comparison of the probable impact of the Titanic against the iceberg that destroyed her, with the projecting force of the guns on a modern battleship, is made by Capt Charles A. McAllister, engineer-in-chief of the revenue cutter service.

"The impact of the Titanic against the iceberg was probably equivalent to the simultaneous fire of thirty twelve-inch projectiles, or the concentrated fire of three such dreadnoughts as the Florida," said Capt. McAllister. "The fire of ten twelve-inch guns such as the Florida carries is supposed to be sufficient to put any battleship afloat out of business if the projectiles should strike simultaneously. The force of the Titanic striking the iceberg must have been approximately 1,000,000 foot tons, equivalent to her being struck simultaneously by thirty such projectiles.

"It is a wonder, in the light of such a comparison, that she floated so long. It is inconceivable that ingenuity of man can ever devise a floating structure to withstand such a terrible collision."

GET ACTION IN CONGRESS

Members Present Resolutions Bearing on Disasters at Sea.

Senate Adopts One Unanimously and House Committee Is Busy.

Washington, April 18.—Congress acted swiftly on the Titanic catastrophe. Bills and resolutions designed to prevent repetition of the awful disaster off the Newfoundland banks poured into both houses, and the senate agreed to a resolution directing a thorough investigation by the commerce commission into the cause leading to the wreck, with particular reference to the inadequacy of life boats. This resolution, presented by Senator Smith of Michigan, was adopted by unanimous consent in one hour and twenty minutes.

Senators Martine of New Jersey and Perkins of California, the latter chairman of the naval affairs committee, also introduced bills.

The Martine resolution was referred to the foreign relations committee and the Perkins resolution went to the commerce committee.

House Busy, Too.

The house committee on merchant marine will speedily take up the many bills and resolutions which have been introduced bearing on the Titanic disaster. Representative Alexander of Missouri, chairman of the committee, introduced two resolutions. One would direct the president to invite the maritime nations of the world to appoint members of an international commission to define ship lines and routes and to minimize the danger of collisions at sea. The other would extend a similar invitation to nations interested in North Atlantic steamship travel to form a commission to arrange for a patrol of North Atlantic waters to warn ships.

Representative Sulzer of New York, chairman of the foreign relations committee, offered a joint resolution identical with the resolution introduced by Mr. Perkins.

Makes Carelessness Felony.

The Perkins-Sulzer provisions would require one life preserver for each person aboard. They would also make it a felony for any captain, executive officer or resident general agent of a corporation actually charged with control, management, operation, equipment or navigation of ocean vessels to knowingly permit a vessel to sail from any port of the United States without full life saving equipment. The penalty would be imprisonment at hard labor for not more than ten years.

Gen. George Uhler, supervising inspector general of the steamboat inspection service, expressed the view that much good could be accomplished by an international congress to consider life saving appliances. He said that there was no action that his department could take in the Titanic case in view of the fact that the vessel was a foreign craft, complying with the British navigation laws.

HARRIS NOT ON CARPATHIA.

New York, April 18.—Henry B. Harris, the theatrical manager, is not among the Titanic survivors on the Carpathia, according to a message received at the Hudson theater from Mrs. Henry B. Harris, his wife, who with Mr. Harris was on board the Titanic. Mrs. Harris' name has appeared in the list of the saved. The message came from the steamer Carpathia by way of Halifax and said:

"Am safe. Praying that Harry has been plicked up by another steamer. Arrive Carpathia.—Rene."

NO COMPROMISE AMONG WOODMEN

New Rates Will Be Enforced Unless Courts Order Otherwise.

Rock Island, Ill., April 18. — Referring to a meeting at Elgin, Ill., of Modern Woodmen yesterday to protest against the enforcement of the new rates adpoted by the head camp a statement was issued from national headquarters of the society in this city. It said:

"The new rates will be enforced as enacted by the head camp. The membership of the society, as a whole, is giving the management its loyal support. Political opposition to the officers of the society has fixed upon this rate question as a popular issue.

"The only possibility of the new rates not being enforced as adopted by the society's supreme governing body, lies in the legal proceedings now pending at Springfield, Ill. The whole question will be thrashed out in the courts at an early date and the society looks for a victory.

"There will be no compromise with these discontented elements, led by self-seeking politicians. The society's interests are entirely safe."

C., M. & ST. P. WRECK BLAME IS FIXED

Odessa Disaster Leads to Censuring of Railroad Company.

Washington, April 18. — The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway is censured by H. W. Belknap, chief inspector of safety appliances of the interstate commerce commission, in his report of the wreck at Odessa, Minn., on Dec. 18, when ten persons were killed and twenty-three injured. He says the company's rules are not enforced by the officials nor understood by the employes.

The failure of Flagman Law to properly protect his train is given as the cause of the wreck while the contributing cause is placed on Train Dispatcher Noonan. Conductor Montell and Operator Adams at Odessa also were censured.

ALABAMA SOLID FOR UNDERWOOD

Platform Includes Plank for Revision of the Banking Laws.

Montgomery, Ala., April 18. — Alabama's forty-eight delegates, representing twenty-four votes in the Democratic national convention, were instructed to vote for Oscar W. Underwood, "until a nomination for president shall have been made" by the state convention here.

If there was a sentiment for any other candidate it was not manifest in the convention. Charges that "steam roller" tactics were employed to put through a "slate" of delegates at large caused some discord, but it only came at intervals and finally those selected on the alleged "slate" were named, with one exception.

One plank in the platform favors a "Democratic revision and codification of our antiquated banking laws, which would create an elastic banking system and preserve our independent banks from any dominant financial or political control." It is said to represent Mr. Underwood's views on the question of currency reform.

The resolutions also declare for direct election of senators; tariff for revenue only; the rigid enforcement of laws made to control trusts; a federal income tax, and federal aid in the construction and maintenance of post roads.

NORTH DAKOTA SUGAR STATE

Secretary Wilson Says It Could Raise Enough for All America.

Washington, April 18. — Secretary Wilson, before the senate finance committee at the hearing on the free sugar bill, said that enough sugar could be grown in North Dakota to supply the United States.

He said that if immigrants could be diverted to the country and farmers could produce 18 to 20 tons of beets per acre, this country would be independent of the tariff and the people would be saved $100,000,000 a year.

SMALL USERS NOT GIVEN FLAT RATE

Hibbing Water and Light Commission Refuses Commercial Club's Request.

Hibbing, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—The water and light commission has declined to grant the request of a committee from the Commercial club for a flat rate for water and lighting service. The contention of those interested in a flat rate was that as the plant is a municipal affair and on a paying basis there should be a reduction in the rates and all consumers should be treated alike.

Against Good Business.

The commission declined to grant the request on the ground that it would not be consistent with good business and that the cost of furnishing service to the small customer was proportionately greater than to the large consumer. Alterations and improvements to the plant are also contemplated that preclude the advisability of any change to the rates at present.

BIG HILL MINE STARTING WORK

Marble People Jubilant Over Resumption of Work at Property.

Marble, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—With forty more men going to work this morning, extensive preparations are being hurriedly made at the Hill mine for the opening of the shipping season. Business men are very jubilant and confident that Marble shall never again experience a close down. It is rumored that the stripping of Section 16 will begin Aug. 1 and the Arcturus early in September.

MANY PROMISING TO FURNISH CREAM

Grand Rapids Creamery Is Becoming More Popular With the Farmers.

Grand Rapids, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—The Grand Rapids creamery is receiving some encouraging pledges of patronage, and large quantities of cream are looked for from numerous sources, in the immediate future. Last week Supt. A. J. McGuire of the state farm, president, and O. J. Niles, secretary, of the local creamery association, and O. W. Holmes, agricultural instructor in the schools of District No. 1, held meetings at Blackberry and Trout Lake, and as a result there will be a large number of new patrons who will commence bringing in cream from those neighborhoods.

Herman Gran, a Trout Lake farmer, was the first to bring in cream from his neighborhood. He took out cream cans for B. E. Benson, Oscar Hagaman, Frank Gran, Charles Point, Matt Hammer, Matt Saari, Martin Mattson, and a number of others are planning on starting sending in cream soon. All the foregoig are Finnish and all are first-class dairymen. They have made butter for years, and their product always sold well commanding the highest prices, but they realize that in time their local market will not be as good as formerly, and they have determined to help the creamery.

Korncake to Send Cream.

Fred Yost of the Korncake country, states that as soon as the roads get a little better he and his neighbors will bring their cream to the creamery. The majority of the farmers in that neighborhood have also been making butter, and some have quite good sized dairy herds.

One encouraging new patron is the Itasca Lumber company farm at Deer River, which commenced shipping cream to the local creamery the past week. There is a large section north and west of Deer River which is coming to the front in an agriculutral way, and particularly along dairying lines, and they are just at the point where their dairy product could be marketed more advantageously at a creamery.

Arthur Iten, the new buttermaker, who is a Swiss dairyman, says that the prospects of the local creamery are the best of any he has ever seen anywhere. "Inside of two years," said Mr. Iten, "this creamery will be without exception the best in the state."

MANY OBESE ACTRESSES REJOICE OVER NEW DRUGLESS OBESITY TREATMENT

WHO PENNED THESE CRISP LINES EXPOSING SECRETS OF GREEN ROOM?

AND, AFTER ALL, WAS MAXINE ELLIOTT PIQUED OVER THEM—AND DID SHE REALLY ADOPT THIS DRUGLESS OBESITY REDUCTION TREATMENT?

If the gossip that recently leaked from the inner secrecy of the green room of a local theater is to be accredited, who was it who wrote these lines—and did they go to Maxine Elliott and induce that remarkable actress to think about a comparison between girlhood measurements, and the lines of matronly splendor? At any rate, these are the lines in question:

"I want to be—want to be—want to be lean again;
I am just crazy to be fit to be seen again—
Oh, but it's frightful for me to be short of breath—
Just to be slender, I'm sure I'd be pleased to death."

And the same rumor says that these lines were mailed last St. Valentine's Day, and so upset Miss Elliott that she took two resolves. The first, it is whispered, was to get even with the writer of the lines. The second was to be as slender as she was in the early days, when through her art, and likewise beauty, Miss Elliott climbed the ladder to fame, and through her splendid genius has reached the very pinnacle of perfection.

And the gossips ask if this is really why Miss Elliott has changed so. "Truly," one of the nimble gossipers said, "it does not seem at all like the same Miss Elliott. I wonder what she did, and if she really used the new drugless reducing treatment?"

"Ask Miss Hamilton—Miss Marjorie M. Hamilton of Denver," another is said to have replied. "She is the originator of the famous drugless treatment for fat reduction, you know. And, too, Miss Hamilton was one of the most widely known and highest priced photographic models in the country—and you know the story of what fat was doing to lose her the position she occupied!

"She just got busy and thought it all out—and now, I am told on the most excellent authority, she has the wealthiest and most influential society ladies and actresses in the land sending for her drugless treatment, many using assumed names when ordering."

But Miss Hamilton refuses to be "pumped." She simply looks innocent, and says: "Did Miss Olga Nethersole really send that poetry to Miss Elliott? I can scarcely believe it—but, then, I have heard that Miss Elliott is slender and beautiful again—and isn't it lovely that this is true—her return to youthful lines, I mean."

FINED $100 FOR SEINING FISH

Game Warden Wood Has Law Breaker Heavily Fined at Virginia.

Virginia, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—According to statements made by Game Warden George E. Wood, who has just returned from a trip to various points further north, there is still much flagrant violation of the game and fish laws by settlers and others. The chief violations are in "shining" deer, dynamiting fish in streams and lakes and in netting fish. He had Alexander Anderson before C. O. Welch, justice of the peace of Gilbert, yesterday. The accused admitted his guilt and was fined $100 and costs, $90 of which was remitted. Anderson was netting fish.

The game warden also has a case against Charles Lahti, which will have a hearing before H. C. Barrett, justice of the peace at Buhl. Lahti is charged with netting fish in McQuade lake north of here. Lahti was under arrest and was released under bonds of $200.

FAVORS PENAL FARM.

Virginia Attorney Strongly Advocates Proposed Institution.

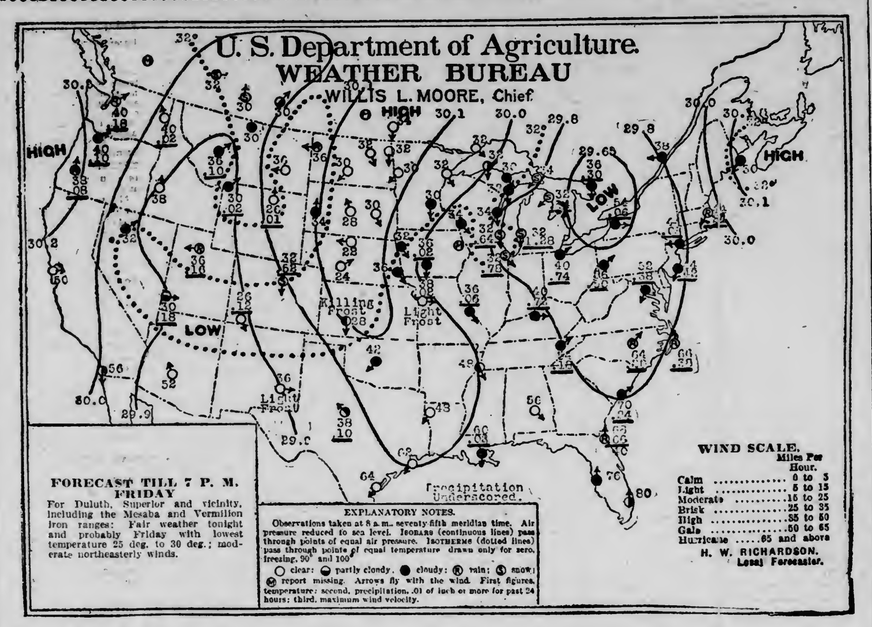
Virginia, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—The benefits to accrue from the proposed county penal farm are patent to R. C. Pickering, a local attorney, who says the idea is a step in the right direction.

"The jails of the county (ours is no worse than others) are a disgrace to the country and probably do as much as any other institution or thing toward making and breeding of criminals," says Mr. Pickering.

"Jails should be places for the detention of criminals who are awaiting trial and no one confined therein should be permitted to see or hear any other person thus confined. Crime is increasing at a very rapid rate in this country and we should take radical steps to stop it."

BREAKING OUT COVERED BODY

Where Scratched It Made Sores. Terrible Itching and Burning Kept Her from Sleeping. Cuticura Remedies Completely Cured Her. No Return.



Waukegan, Ill. — "Three years ago this winter I had a breaking out that covered my whole body. It itched so it seemed as if I should go crazy. It first came out in little pimples on my back and spread till it covered my whole body and limbs down to my knees, also my arms down to my elbows. Where I scratched, it made sores, and the terrible itching and burning kept me from sleeping. I tried several remedies all to no purpose. Then I concluded to try the Cuticura Remedies. I used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, also the Resolvent, for about four months, and they completely cured me of eczema. I have had no return of the disease since. I never had a good night's rest after the skin eruption first broke out till I commenced using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I had only used them a few days before I could see they were beginning to heal, and the terrible itching was gone.

"Those that lived in the house at the time know how I suffered, and how the Cuticura Soap and Ointments cured me. I never take a bath without using the Cuticura Soap, and I do not believe there are better remedies for any skin disease than the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Miss Sarah Calkins, Mar. 16, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment do so much for skin eruptions, poor complexions, red, rough hands, and dry, thin and falling hair, and cost so little that it is almost criminal not to use them. Sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. book on skin and scalp treatment. Address, "Cuticura," Dept. T, Boston. Tender-faced men should use Cuticura Soap Shaving Stick.

FEARING ABOUT ELY RESIDENTS

Friends of Joseph Kelsel Wonder Whether He Was on the Titanic.

Ely, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—Friends of Joseph Kelsel of this city are wondering whether he was on the ill-fated Titanic and if so whether he was saved.

Mr. Kelsel left Ely last fall for a visit at his old home in England, and was to return to his work here at the opening of the shipping season. Letters received from him a little while ago by his Ely friends, suggested that as there was to be a boat making her maiden trip, he would wait a week and come across in the Titanic. Nothing has since been heard from him. Mr. Kelsel has been employed by the Duluth & Iron Rang railroad as weighmaster for some time, and is well known here.

His original plans were to come a week earlier, but his desire to make the voyage on a ship making her maiden trip caused a change in his plans.

HAS PROSPERED AT ROUND LAKE

Settlers in That Section of Itasca County Have Rapidly Forged Ahead.

Deer River, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—"This is the finest country agriculturally that the sun shines on," said A. A. Clampetts, one of the pioneers of the Round Lake country, who has been in Deer River for a few days Mr. Clampetts went to Round Lake some six years ago and took up a homestead. It was then about the wildest little place that he had ever seen, and he planned on spending as little time as possible there. But he found enjoyment in seeing the result of his work—his buildings looming up, his clearings grow and the wonderful crops of vegetables that he could raise. He got an inspirtaion that he could make a living from his farm, and he extended his clearing with the end in view of raising enough to support himself. Though he has been there but six years, his first expectations have been much more than realized.

Raises Food Products.

The needs of the homesteader are simple. He raises his own meat and his own vegetables, and the few necessities are easily purchased with the result of his toil off the farm if he so prefers. Mr. Clampetts, however, did not resort to going off his farm to work. He went to raising potatoes, and last year he had some 900 bushels of spuds which he disposed of right on the place at good prcies. He has erected as fine a house as one finds on many farms in the older settled country, and his clearing is one to be proud of in this north country. Mr. Clampetts states that his neighbors, who are largely Finns, are in a very prosperous condition, and that they are developing the country at an incredible rate. Good roads have been one of the matters which have been looked after, and the town in which Mr. Clampetts is located has some excellent highways.

STRIPPING WORK IS STARTED NEAR BUHL.

Buhl, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—Butler Bros. started steam shovels working at the Grant mine near here the first of the week removing overburden and ore shipments are expected to begin from that action next week.

BOYS' CONFERENCE FOR TWO HARBORS

Gathering to Be Held as Result of Recent Duluth Religious Meet.

Two Harbors, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—This city is to entertain a boys' conference on Saturday and Sunday, April 27 and 28. This is the result of the delegation of boys from the various local churches through the Y. M. C. A. to the boys' conference of the Men and Religious campaign in Duluth recently, among whom are: Robert McCurdy, Harold Irwin, Archie Pegelow, Leo Streeter, Richard Ericson, George McLeod, Harry Daniels and J. C. Manville.

A joint committee was appointed to make all necessary arrangements for a boys' conference to be held here and to bring in outside speakers from Duluth who have been the backbone of the Men and Religion campaign there. This committee is composed as follows: David Owens, chairman; Bruce Elliott, Robert McCurdy, Leo Streeter, George McLeod and J. C. Manville.

Plans for Conference.

This committee has mapped out the following plan: Saturday and Sunday, April 27 and 28, conference banquet, Saturday, April 27, 6:30 p. m., 25 cents a plate; toastmaster, R. B. Elliott; addresses, local, speakers, Robert McCurdy, William Johnson, Leo Streeter, Al Hunter, George McLeod, Archie Pegelow, R. Ericson, William Fortman and R. B. Elliott. Duluth speakers W. L. Smithies, Bert N. Wheeler, Jr. R. W. Bowden, N. D. McLeod. No doubt the latter speakers will be heard in the local pulpits on Sunday, April 28 on some phase of boys' work.

Music for the occasion will be looked after by Robert McCurdy. Archie Pegelow will have charge of the tickets for the banquet. The local Bean club will be responsible for the menu, solicitations and the serving while J. C. Manville, boys' secretary at the Y. M. C. A. will arrange for the banquet.

Plan Church Concert.

The Young People's Society of the Norwegian Lutheran church will give a vocal concert at the church next Thursday evening, at which Thomas S. Remstad, America's foremost Scandinavian tenor, and Kenneth Cranston, America's youngest professional concert tenor, will sing.

BOARD'S ACTION IS NOT POPULAR

Two Harbors Dissatisfied With Changes Made in School Districts.

Two Harbors, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—The changes made by the Lake county board in the boundaries of the different school districts of the county are not making a great hit here judging by adverse comments. It is claimed that district No. 2 (Two Harbors), which petitioned for the change in order to include more taxable property, will not benefit very much, while Knike River will.

The changes in assessable property in the districts follow:

No. 1, from $455,000 to $354,000; No. 2, from $2,510,000 to $2,670,000; No. 3, from $880,000 to $644,000; No. 4, from $656,000 to $450,000; No. 5, from $738,000 to $555,000.

WILL PRESENT PLAY.

Hibbing Italians to Play "Francesca di Rimini."

Hibbing, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—The Italian Dramatic club will present "Francesca Di Rimini" at the Power theater Sunday evening. It will be presented at Chisholm also. Italian people from all the range towns are expected to attend the performance here. The cast has been drilled for two months and will give a complete and elaborately costumed production. A special invitation has been extended to Royal Consular Agent Castiglieno of Duluth to attend together with other prominent Italian people of that city and several are expected to come.

COUNTY CANNOT HELP TO REPAIR AN AVENUE.

Two Harbors, Minn., April 18.—(Special to The Herald.)—The county commissioners have turned down the request of the city that the county aid in repairing Seventh avenue because that thoroughfare is a continuation of the main county road through town because the county attorney advised them such action would be illegal. The attorney general has also been asked for advice on the subject. The county has promised to improve the roads leading to the city.

FLOODS RICH COTTON LAND

an exploration of the inundated territory in search of refugees. If any lives are lost the number will be small, as preparations for flight had been made at all the important towns.

The crevasse in the levee occurred late last night on the Hughes plantation in Bolivar county, four miles south of Beulah and about forty miles north of Greenville. When the embankment gave way 150 feet of the earth works collapsed. This morning the gap is almost 1,000 feet wide.

Adds 25,000 to Sufferers.

Memphis, Tenn., April 18.—The break in the main line levee on the Mississippi river four miles below Rosedale, Miss., and another on the Arkansas river, added 25,000 persons to the list of flood sufferers in Southern Arkansas, Northeastern Louisiana and Northwestern Mississippi, the flood inundating an area of rich cotton country almost as large as the New England states.

Hundreds are marooned in isolated places. Many have been without food for days and scores are suffering from want of clothing.

Officials of the national government have combined forces with state officials to carry relief to as many as possible. The need of motor boats and skiffs to be used in rescuing persons in trees and from housetops is extreme and all available craft has been bought or chartered by the officials.

Railroads Out of Service.

Urgent appeals from more than 8,000 persons have been received at Vicksburg, where a large camp will be established at once under the protection of the Mississippi National Guard.

Railroads are all out of commission in the inundated sections and whatever supplies are collected are distributed by boats.

SENATORS TO QUIZ ISMAY

to this terrible disaster and to do it now."

Senator Smith said he and several other members of his committee would present this argument to Mr. Ismay and others in the hope that they would be willing to accept subpoenas from the sergeant-at-arms of the senate, who would accompany them.

May Intercept Carpathia.

Chairman Smith and other members of the committee said no time would be lost in requesting the officials to testify. The senators may go down the harbor on a revenue cutter to intercept the Carpathia. Witnesses will be asked to come to Washington at once, according to present plans.

Immediately after his appointment as chairman of the sub-committee, Senator Smith went to the White House to confer with President Taft. One subject was to induce the president to detail George Uhler, supervising inspector general of the steamship inspection service, to accompany the committee to New York. He also desired to request that Secretary Nagel of the department of commerce and labor, who has jurisdiction over inspection of vessels, to go with the committee.

Senator Smith expressed a willingness to co-operate with any committee from the house in the investigation, but manifested a disposition not to delay his course in order to secure co-operation. He said the testimony of the survivors would be much more valuable to the government if procured immediately upon arrival.

Senator Cullom announced today that he would call a meeting of the foreign relations committee Saturday with a view to reporting out the Martin resolution requesting the president to open negotiations for an international agreement in regard to the safety of passengers at sea.

Would Call Surviving Officers.

Among those who will be summoned to appear before the congressional investigating committee, besides J. Bruce Ismay, will be the second, third, fourth and fifth officers of the Titanic, who are reported to have been saved and any other officers of the ship who may have survived.

An important feature of the investigation may be the message transmitted through the Titanic, April 14, the day of the calamity, from the steamer Amerika to the hydrographic office of the United States navy, warning of icebergs in the Titanic's vicinity. Naval officials believe that one of the icebergs reported by the Amerika caused the Titanic's wreck, and were amazed by the reports that the Titanic was running at full speed in view of the known presence of danger.

House May Join Probe.

A joint investigation of the Titanic catastrophe by a committee representing both houses of congress is favored by Chairman Alexander of the house committee on merchant marine. The action of the senate in authorizing an investigation by its committee on commerce will be followed by a suggestion from Chairman Alexander to the house committee on rules that a joint inquiry be proposed. The rules committee now is considering the resolution introduced by Representative Mott of New York providing for an investigation by the house.

Mr. Alexander presented in the house today a joint resolution proposing an international maritime conference to "consider uniform laws and regulations for the greater security of life and property on merchant vessels at sea." Included for the subjects for the conference specified in the Alexander resolutions are regulations for efficiency of crews, construction of vessels, equipment of lifeboats, wireless apparatus, searchlights, submarine bells, lifesaving and fire extinguishing apparatus.

Asks For Conference.

The resolution requests the president to invite foreign nations to the conference and would empower the latter to consider "regulations for an international system of reporting and disseminating information relating to aids and perils to navigation."

Chairman Alexander today declared emphatically that the present laws and maritime regulations of the United States, if enforced, are strong enough to compel an adequate number of lifeboats on vessels entering or leaving United States ports.

Many members of the house openly are opposed to immediate action looking toward an investigation of the disaster.

Opposed by Sulzer.

Representative Sulzer of New York and Chairman Henry of the rules committee oppose an investigation.

"It is only throwing dust in the people's eyes," said Mr. Sulzer. "The matter was fully gone into when the Slocum burned in New York several years ago. What we want is to make steamship owners criminally liable for failing to equip their vessels properly. Make it a felony and send those criminally negligent steamship men to jail and we will have no more of these disasters."

Regulations that will prevent interference by amateurs in times of emergency were taken up today by the house committee on merchant marine. A report from a sub-committee was laid before the full committee in executive session today.

To Restrict Amateurs.

The Alexander bill to regulate wireless telegraphy favorably was acted upon by the merchant marine committee today and reported back to the house shortly after noon. It would rigidly restrict the operation of amateurs and others to wave lengths not exceeding 200 meters. Experimenters or others engaged in important work might receive special permits from the secretary of commerce and labor to operate under greater wave length.

The Alexander resolution for the establishment of recognized trans-Atlantic travel routes by international agreements also was favorably reported by the committee.

The two measures probably will come up for action at an early date owing to the need for legislation made clear by the Titanic catastrophe.

No Need Being Old or Wrinkled Before 75c

Lillian Russell says any woman who has wrinkles before she's 75 is herself responsible for them. Sunshine and fresh air she considers more valuable as complexion preservers than nostrums and cosmetics.

The chief objection to cosmetics is that at best they only temporarily cover up defects. There are certain true aids to Nature which may be applied with directly opposite effect. Ordinary mercolized wax, for instance, actually removes a bad or oldish complexion, by gradually, almost imperceptibly, peeling off the worn-out scarf skin. Just one ounce, procurable at any drug store, will soon unveil an entirely new and natural complexion, with an exquisite girlish color. Of course cutaneous blemishes like pimples, freckles, fine lines, moth patches, liver spots, disappear with the discarded skin.

To prevent or remove wrinkles, a face bath which also produces natural results is made by dissolving an ounce of saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. It's wonderfully effective.

OWNERS ARE NOT LIABLE

Damage Suits Against White Star Line Will Be Useless.

Liability of Owners Does Not Exceed Value of Vessel.

Survivors from the steamer Titanic will be unable to collect any damages from the company for the loss of their baggage and effects, and relatives of those who lost their lives will be unable to recover any damages from the owners of the vessel.

H. R. Spencer, of the law firm of Spencer & Marshall, who have quite an extensive admiralty practice, stated this afternoon that under the general maritime laws the liability of the owners of the vessel in a wreck only equalled the value of the vessel.

"Since the boat was a total loss that ended the owners' liability," said Mr. Spencer. "That is the situation under the international maritime laws. There is a possibility that England has recently passed a law changing this, and as the boat was under the English flag this law would supersede the maritime laws, but I do not know of any such law and do not think it exists."

Those who suffered loss of property by the sinking of the Titanic, or whose friends or relatives lost their lives, will therefore receive no financial recompense.

Railroad Managers Send Reply to Demand for More Pay.

Say It Is Impossible to Grant That and Those That Would Follow.

New York, April 18. — The committee of general managers of the Eastern railroads, after a further consideration today of the renewed demands by the engineers of the fifty railroads in the Eastern territory for increased wages, sent a communication to Grand Chief Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, that "It is not possible to accede to your wage requests and those certain to follow."

SAY CARPATHIA WILL DOCK AT 11 O'CLOCK

New York, April 18. — The following bulletin was made public by the White Star line shortly after 3 o'clock this afternoon: "Carpathia due at Sandy Hook, 9 p. m. Should dock at 11 p. m."

MONTANA SLAYER LYNCHED BY MOB

Murderer of Woman Taken From Jail and Hanged at Forsyth.

Glendive, Mont., April 18.—Henry Rosner, in the Rosebud county jail at Forsyth, Mont., accused of the murder of Mrs. William Merrill at a lonely ranch house near that place, was hanged early today by a mob, according to telephone advices received here. Attempts of the sheriff and under sheriff to deter the mob were unavailing.

At the Garden School.

This afternoon Prof. K. A. Kirkpatrick of the state university and in charge of the work at the Duluth garden school going on each afternoon and evening at the local Y. M. C. A., took up cultivation.

N. E. Chapman told the students assembled what he had been able to do in a garden 16 by 20 feet in the city of Minneapolis.

Tonight fruits, both trees and shrubs, will be taken up and discussed for the benefit of the students of Prof. Kirkpatrick. He will also take up the matter of pruning and training vines.

The lecture will be illustrated by slides, showing ornamental planting and the cultivation of strawberries.

PRIMITIVE IDEAS OF HYGIENE.

From the Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette: Hindu ambassadors once sent to England by a native prince were regarded as so polluted that on their return to India nothing but being born again would purify them, and they were accordingly dragged through a gold image of the sacred Yoni.

A writer describes a curious custom of the Baretse in South Africa. A few days after the death of a man the doctor comes and makes an incision on the forehead of each of the survivors of his relatives and fills it with medicine to ward off the contagion and the effect of the sorcery that caused his death.

Leland calls attention to a custom of taking medicines on the threshold in ancient Tuscany, the idea being that the threshold was the border line between the outer world, where evil spirits freely roam.

If a person dies within an Eskimo hut everything in the hut must be destroyed or thrown away as well as everything which had come into contact with the deceased.

A man in Iowa has patented a bedstead that holds a mattress on rollers and pivots. The object is to turn the mattress around or turn it over with slight effort.

Store-competition is the mother of bargains.

WHEAT STILL GOES HIGHER

Prices Make New High Record for the Year on This Continent.

Larger Flaxseed Offers Bear the Price But It Is Well Upheld.

Duluth Board of Trade, April 18.—Wheat closed higher today than it has done any time since the bullish days of last October, when it was away up by reason of the defeat of Canadian reciprocity. On Oct. 24 last cash No. 1 nortnern on the Duluth market closed at $1.11⅝, but never since that time has it closed so high as it did today, at $1.11. Duluth May today gained a full cent. Cash closed a cent higher than May. Durum was practically unchanged. Oats closed ⅝c off. Rye and barley closed unchanged. May and July flax closed ¼c down by reason of enlarged offers, which should probably have had a more bearish effect than they did had not the price been sustained by the American crushers.

Wheat this morning made some new high records for the year and seemed on the eve of going even higher than it did during the excitement following the defeat of Canadian reciprocity last fall. The morning was extremely bullish. The prices were boosted by the continued reports of heavy damage to winter wheat and the comments by men whose opinions carry weight. Moreover, the primary receipts from the American farms were much less than those of a year ago. Altogether the situation was one that could not have any other effect than to send wheat skyward.

Duluth May wheat, which closed yesterday at $1.09 bid, opened this morning at $1.09½ bid, and at noon was selling for $1.10⅛. There were also bulges at Chicago, Minneapolis and Winnipeg.

Foreign cables were almost all higher. Liverpool wheat closed at an advance of ½d to ⅝d, notwithstanding reprts of larger estimated Argentine exports. The damage to the American winter wheat and an enlarged inquiry for Australian cargoes were the principal bullish factors.

Flaxseed Holds Firm.

Flaxseed held firm in the Duluth market this morning in spite of much larger offers from the country. Crushers are still anxious to keep up the Duluth price and they are taking the flax as it comes in order to do this. Minneapolis crushers have enough flaxseed, according to private correspondence received from them by Duluth brokers, to last for about 60 days. Hence, they are not anxious for the seed and are bidding three cents below the Duluth May price, whereas they have for a long time been bidding the Duluth May price. This change will undoubtedly cause a great deal of the North Dakota flaxseed, including much of that which is being thrashed in that state now, to come to Duluth instead of Minneapolis. This means that it will be a more expensive proposition for the American crushers to keep up the price of the Duluth flaxseed, as they will have to buy more of it. Duluth May flaxseed at noon today was unchanged, but July flaxseed was ¼c down. Foreign quotations had little effect on the Duluth price today, for the foreign prices were very steady. Winnipeg May at noon today was unchanged at $1.94. Buenos Ayres April closed last night at $1.76½, being unchanged from the close of the night before. London April and June Calcutta closed today at $2.16, being likewise unchanged.

MARKET GOSSIP

The Burlington report says wheat in Missouri is less than half a crop.

The weather map shows temperatures of 26 to 34 above over the Canadian northwest and 28 to 36 over the American northwest.

Petri wired from St. Louis: "The wheat in my vicinity in St. Louis county is losing ground every day. More dead spots are appearing."

Argentine shipments: Wheat, this week, 5,200,000 bu.; last week, 3,992,000 bu.; last year, 2,824,000 bu. Corn, 125,000 bu.; 111,000 bu.; none.

The following is from B. W. Snow at St. Louis, Mo.: "There is a small area of very good wheat in the lower Wabash valley from Vincennes to Mount Vernon. All my way across Illinois from Olney to St. Louis, the situation is very bad. More than half the acreage is absolutely worthless, and the balance for the most part is thin and spotted and at best can hardly make eight bushels per acre. The failure through central, western and southern Ohio, north central and southern Indiana except the Wabash valley and across the northern part of southern Illinois is the most complete I have ever seen in twenty-four years of crop reporting. In these states there are fully 3,000,000 acres in which the plant is completely dead. This means a record-breaking total abandoned acreage this year. Through southern Illinois early seeded oats are coming up to a good stand and seeding is being pushed to the limit on the wheat land."

A correspondent at Comstock, Minn., says: "From what I can learn the wheat acreage here will be cut down from 60 to 70 per cent. Farmers are putting in oats, rye, barley and potatoes in place of wheat."

T. W. Lewis wired from St. Louis, Mo.: "The improvement noted in southwest Indiana extends only a short distance into Illinois across the central part of the state. The abandoned acreage will be large. The plant is thin and backward in the balance of the fields. The situation on the whole is very unpromising. Probably never has there been such extensive winter kill-

CHICAGO MARKET.

Wheat Prices Turn Upward on Decreasing Liverpool Stocks.

Chicago, April 18.—Wheat prices took an upward turn today as a result of decreasing stocks at Liverpool and because of smaller Argentine shipments than expected. The weather was unfavorable in the spring crop districts northwest of Chicago, but this fact had an offset in heavy rains throughout the greater part of the region devoted to winter wheat. Smallness of receipts at all points counted against the bears. Outside longs who recently sold out were reinstating. The larger professional traders, however, were selling. Opening figures ranged from ¼c to ⅜@1c higher. July started at $1.06¾@1.07¼, a gain of ⅝@¼c to ¾@⅞c but reacted to $1.06½.

Predictions of the largest acreage abandonment on record led to a decided advance. It was contended also there would be less than half a crop along the Burlington in Missouri. Closing prices, however, were easy with July at $1.06⅝@1.06¾, a net gain of ⅜c.

Wet, cold weather strengthened the market for corn. There was active buying on the part of commission houses. July opened ⅛@¼c to⅜@½c up at 77⅜@77⅝c, and seemed inclined to keep within these limits.

After a little further rise the market sagged, owing to news of United States industries importing corn from Argentina. The close was weak at 75⅞@76c for July, a loss of 1¼c net.

The fact that offerings of oats proved to be only scattered allowed that cereal to climb. An active demand was in evidence July started ⅛@½c higher at 54¾@55c and steadied at 54⅝@54¾c.

Provisions ascended owing to the upward tendency of grain and hogs. Initial transactions varied from last night's level to 17½c above with September delivery $18.75@18.80 for pork, $10.65@10.67½ for lard and $10.47½ for ribs.

Minor declines were made by Southern Pacific, Great Northern, Southern Railway, Lehigh Valley, Atchison preferred and American Can.

In the standard group United States Steel and New York Central were the feature of the first hour, the latter touching 120, its highest figure in considerably over a year. Gains of a point or more were made by Canadian Pacific, Baltimore & Ohio, Rock Island common and preferred and Western Maryland, while such specialties as American Linseed common and preferred, Pressed Steel Car, American Beet Sugar, Virginia-Carolina Chemical and the Corn Products and Central Leather stocks were off 1 to 2 points.

Heavy selling just before noon wiped out practically all early gains, with Union Pacific a point under yesterday's close. The movement had its inception in reports that a hitch had come in the negotiations between the railway managers and the locomotive engineers, but of this there was no official confirmation. The previous rise in New York Central was accompanied by reports of new financing with stock rights, but more likely it was based on excellent earnings.

The sensational feature of the morning was furnished by the "curb" where old Marconi wireless sold up to 225, an overnight rise of 55 points and a gain in less than a week's time of over 150 points. Before noon the stock receded to 205. Bonds were irregular.

Dealings were nominal in the afternoon with few changes of note, aside from increased activity in the minor steel shares. Bethlehem Steel common and preferred made further upward progress, but elsewhere fluctuations were exceedingly narrow.

The market closed steady. The inevitable realizing on good news followed the announcement of the increase in the Amalgamated Copper dividend to 4 per cent and the prices fell to the lowest figures of the day. Liquidation in Missouri Pacific also cost it over a point, but the general list was almost motionless. Toward the end there was a appreciable stiffening all around, but the buying was of the most trivial character and the market's changes were unimportant.

To the Stockholders of Butte and Superior Copper Co., Limited.

You have already been informed regarding the plans of the management with reference to equipping the properties of your company with a mill of a capacity of 500 tons of ore per day. The work of construction has been prosecuted diligently and during this period the developments in the mine have disclosed ore reserves of such magnitude and extent that your engineers have united in the recommendation that the capacity of the mill be increased to 1,000 tons of ore per day and that the mine be equipped to meet these requirements. The additional savings and economies that may be introduced by operating on the larger basis above stated fully justify the additional expenditures necessary to accomplish it. Your board has therefore unanimously recommended the sale of an additional 30,000 shares of stock. This stock will be offered for subscription pro rata to all stockholders of record at the close of business on April 27, 1912, and in view of the fact that the company has outstanding convertible bonds which the holders may elect to convert into stock prior to that time, the exact basis of apportionment cannot now be stated. Stockholders of record on said 27th day of April, 1912, will have the right to subscribe up to and including May 15th, 1912, at $27.50 per share, payment in full for the stock to accompany the subscription, which must be made on or prior to the said May 15th. Immediately after the closing of the books on April 27th subscription warrants will be forwarded to all shareholders covering their right to subscribe and containing full directions as to remittances. The entire issue of 30,000 shares has been underwritten at the price stated by Messrs. Hayden, Stone & Company.

Butte & Superior Copper Co., Lt'd. By Its Board of Directors.

COPPERS HAVE STEADY DAY

Changes of Values of Red Metal Shares Are Few.

Changes in the values of copper stocks today were very few and of scarcely any consequence. Hancock and Calumet & Arizona were slightly higher and Giroux, Vermillion, Butte Alex Scott and Amalgamated were down a little at the close in comparison with the closing figures of yesterday. Copper metal on the London market closed 1s 3d off in comparison with the close of yesterday. The general stock market of New York was steady and showed little change of any consequence.

Paine, Webber & Co., received the following closing letter from Foster at Boston: "The local market had the greatest activity yet seen on this movement. All classes of stocks steadily advanced during the morning hours and held their advance well when the market turned dull in the late dealings. Allouez was very strong, selling at 50, and Tamarack climbed easily to 51. Granby was very strong and active, selling at 59⅞, a new high record on this movement. The story of the day was one of pronounced strength and good buying in all the coppers. Tomorrow, being a holiday on the local board, many buying orders will probably collect and Saturday will see another active market with higher prices."

Gay & Sturgis today received the following closing copper letter from Sturgis at Boston: "The chief news today was in the doubling of Amalgamated dividend to a $4 regular basis. This is a very tangible and pertinent indication of the copper industry's betterment and will have a much more far-reaching influence than Amalgamated stockholders are concerned. The stock showed no indication either way after the declaration, although the increase was almost unanimously expected. The markets generally were active and buoyant. No cessation in the speculation was observable. After the local holiday tomorrow, the Boston market will likely take its incentive from the course of Amalgamated."

THE WAY IN GERMANY.

The Bystander: Last year a Russian traveler asked a Berlin railway official on which platform a train to a particular city would arrive. The official nodded to one side. The Russian interpreted this as permission to cross the rails in the direction of the nod. A shunted engine went over him and cut off his arm. A week later in hospital he received a Strafmandat requiring him to pay 45 marks for "unauthorizedly, and to the state railway regulations contraryingly, crossing the line."

WHEAT STILL GOES HIGHER

Prices Make New High Record for the Year on This Continent.

Larger Flaxseed Offers Bear the Price But It Is Well Upheld.

Duluth Board of Trade, April 18.—Wheat closed higher today than it has done any time since the bullish days of last October, when it was away up by reason of the defeat of Canadian reciprocity. On Oct. 24 last cash No. 1 northern on the Duluth market closed at $1.11⅝, but never since that time has it closed so high as it did today, at $1.11. Duluth May today gained a full cent. Cash closed a cent higher than May. Durum was practically unchanged. Oats closed ⅝c off. Rye and barley closed unchanged. May and July flax closed ¼c down by reason of enlarged offers, which should probably have had a more bearish effect than they did had not the price been sustained by the American crushers.

Wheat this morning made some new high records for the year and seemed on the eve of going even higher than it did during the excitement following the defeat of Canadian reciprocity last fall. The morning was extremely bullish. The prices were boosted by the continued reports of heavy damage to winter wheat and the comments by men whose opinions carry weight. Moreover, the primary receipts from the American farms were much less than those of a year ago. Altogether the situation was one that could not have any other effect than to send wheat skyward.

Duluth May wheat, which closed yesterday at $1.09 bid, opened this morning at $1.09½ bid, and at noon was selling for $1.10⅛. There were also bulges at Chicago, Minneapolis and Winnipeg.

Foreign cables were almost all higher. Liverpool wheat closed at an advance of ½d to ⅜d, notwithstanding reports of larger estimated Argentine exports. The damage to the American winter wheat and an enlarged inquiry for Australian cargoes were the principal bullish factors.

Flaxseed Holds Firm.

Flaxseed held firm in the Duluth market this morning in spite of much larger offers from the country. Crushers are still anxious to keep up the Duluth price and they are taking the flax as it comes in in order to do this. Minneapolis crushers have enough flaxseed, according to private correspondence received from them by Duluth brokers, to last for about 60 days. Hence, they are not anxious for the seed and are bidding three cents below the Duluth May price, whereas they have for a long time been bidding the Duluth May price. This change will undoubtedly cause a great deal of the North Dakota flaxseed, including much of that which is being thrashed in that state now, to come to Duluth instead of Minneapolis. This means that it will be a more expensive proposition for the American crushers to keep up the price of the Duluth flaxseed, as they will have to buy more of it. Duluth May flaxseed at noon today was unchanged, but July flaxseed was ¼c down. Foreign quotations had little effect on the Duluth price today, for the foreign prices were very steady. Winnipeg May at noon today was unchanged at $1.94. Buenos Ayres April closed last night at $1.76½, being unchanged from the close of the night before. London April and June Calcutta closed today at $2.16, being likewise unchanged.

MARKET GOSSIP

The Burlington report says wheat in Missouri is less than half a crop.

The weather map shows temperatures of 26 to 34 above over the Canadian northwest and 28 to 36 over the American northwest.

Petri wired from St. Louis: "The wheat in my vicinity in St. Louis county is losing ground every day. More dead spots are appearing."

Argentine shipments: Wheat, this week, 5,200,000 bu.; last week, 3,992,000 bu.; last year, 2,824,000 bu. Corn, 125,000 bu.; 111,000 bu.; none.

The following is from B. W. Snow at St. Louis, Mo.: "There is a small area of very good wheat in the lower Wabash valley from Vincennes to Mount Vernon. All my way across Illinois from Olney to St. Louis, the situation is very bad. More than half the acreage is absolutely worthless, and the balance for the most part is thin and spotted and at best can hardly make eight bushels per acre. The failure through central, western and southern Ohio, north central and southern Indiana except the Wabash valley and across the northern part of southern Illinois is the most complete I have ever seen in twenty-four years of crop reporting. In these states there are fully 3,000,000 acres in which the plant is completely dead. This means a record-breaking total abandoned acreage this year. Through southern Illinois early seeded oats are coming up to a good stand and seeding is being pushed to the limit on the wheat land."

A correspondent at Comstock, Minn., says: "From what I can learn the wheat acreage here will be cut down from 60 to 70 per cent. Farmers are putting in oats, rye, barley and potatoes in place of wheat."

T. W. Lewis wired from St. Louis, Mo.: "The improvement noted in southwest Indiana extends only a short distance into Illinois across the central part of the state. The abandoned acreage will be large. The plant is thin and backward in the balance of the fields. The situation on the whole is very unpromising. Probably never has there been such extensive winter kill-

CHICAGO MARKET.

Wheat Prices Turn Upward on Decreasing Liverpool Stocks.

Chicago, April 18.—Wheat prices took an upward turn today as a result of decreasing stocks at Liverpool and because of smaller Argentine shipments than expected. The weather was unfavorable in the spring crop districts northwest of Chicago, but this fact had an offset in heavy rains throughout the greater part of the region devoted to winter wheat. Smallness of receipts at all points counted against the bears. Outside longs who recently sold out were reinstating. The larger professional traders, however, were selling. Opening figures ranged from ⅛c to ⅜@1c higher. July started at $1.06¾@1.07⅛, a gain of ⅛@¼c to ¾@⅞c but reacted to $1.06½.

Predictions of the largest acreage abandonment on record led to a decided advance. It was contended also there would be less than half a crop along the Burlington in Missouri. Closing prices, however, were easy with July at $1.06⅝@1.06¾, a net gain of ⅜c.

Wet, cold weather strengthened the market for corn. There was active buying on the part of commission houses. July opened ⅛@¼c to⅜@½c up at 77⅝@77⅝c, and seemed inclined to keep within these limits.

After a little further rise the market sagged, owing to news of United States industries importing corn from Argentina. The close was weak at 75⅞@76c for July, a loss of 1¼c net.

The fact that offerings of oats proved to be only scattered allowed that cereal to climb. An active demand was in evidence July started ⅛@½c higher at 54¾@55c and steadied at 54⅝@54¾c.

Provisions ascended owing to the upward tendency of grain and hogs. Initial transactions varied from last night's level to 17½c above with September delivery $18.75@18.80 for pork, $10.65@10.67½ for lard and $10.47½ for ribs.

EARLY GAINS WIPED OUT

Stocks Start With General Advances But React on Heavy Selling.

Rise of 55 Points of Old Marconi Wireless on the Curb.

New York, April 18.—The stock market opened today with general advances, New York Central being the most prominent feature. United States Steel also showed strength as did the issues of the independent steel and iron companies, including Republic Iron & Steel and Bethlehem Steel. Rock Island common and preferred made substantial gains, with marked strength in American Smelting and Canadian Pacific. Bonds of the International Mercantile Marine company rose fractionally. Minor declines were made by Southern Pacific, Great Northern, Southern Railway, Lehigh Valley, Atchison preferred and American Can.

In the standard group United States Steel and New York Central were the feature of the first hour, the latter touching 120, its highest figure in considerably over a year. Gains of a point or more were made by Canadian Pacific, Baltimore & Ohio, Rock Island common and preferred and Western Maryland, while such specialties as American Linseed common and preferred, Pressed Steel Car, American Beet Sugar, Virginia-Carolina Chemical and the Corn Products and Central Leather stocks were off 1 to 2 points.

Heavy selling just before noon wiped out practically all early gains, with Union Pacific a point under yesterday's close. The movement had its inception in reports that a hitch had come in the negotiations between the railway managers and the locomotive engineers, but of this there was no official confirmation. The previous rise in New York Central was accompanied by reports of new financing with stock rights, but more likely it was based on excellent earnings.

The sensational feature of the morning was furnished by the "curb" where old Marconi wireless sold up to 225, an overnight rise of 55 points and a gain in less than a week's time of over 150 points. Before noon the stock receded to 205. Bonds were irregular.

Dealings were nominal in the afternoon with few changes of note, aside from increased activity in the minor steel shares. Bethlehem Steel common and preferred made further upward progress, but elsewhere fluctuations were exceedingly narrow.

The market closed steady. The inevitable realizing on good news followed the announcement of the increase in the Amalgamated Copper dividend to 4 per cent and the prices fell to the lowest figures of the day. Liquidation in Missouri Pacific also cost it over a point, but the general list was almost motionless. Toward the end there was a appreciable stiffening all around, but the buying was of the most trivial character and the market's changes were unimportant.

Cotton Market.

To the Stockholders of Butte and Superior Copper Co., Limited.

You have already been informed regarding the plans of the management with reference to equipping the properties of your company with a mill of a capacity of 500 tons of ore per day. The work of construction has been prosecuted diligently and during this period the developments in the mine have disclosed ore reserves of such magnitude and extent that your engineers have united in the recommendation that the capacity of the mill be increased to 1,000 tons of ore per day and that the mine be equipped to meet these requirements. The additional savings and economies that may be introduced by operating on the larger basis above stated fully justify the additional expenditures necessary to accomplish it. Your board has therefore unanimously recommended the sale of an additional 30,000 shares of stock. This stock will be offered for subscription pro rata to all stockholders of record at the close of business on April 27, 1912, and in view of the fact that the company has outstanding convertible bonds which the holders may elect to convert into stock prior to that time, the exact basis of apportionment cannot now be stated. Stockholders of record on said 27th day of April, 1912, will have the right to subscribe up to and including May 15th, 1912, at $27.50 per share, payment in full for the stock to accompany the subscription, which must be made on or prior to the said May 15th. Immediately after the closing of the books on April 27th subscription warrants will be forwarded to all shareholders covering their right to subscribe and containing full directions as to remittances. The entire issue of 30,000 shares has been underwritten at the price stated by Messrs. Hayden, Stone & Company.

Butte & Superior Copper Co., Lt'd. By Its Board of Directors.

COPPERS HAVE STEADY DAY

Changes of Values of Red Metal Shares Are Few.

Changes in the values of copper stocks today were very few and of scarcely any consequence. Hancock and Calumet & Arizona were slightly higher and Giroux, Vermilion, Butte Alex Scott and Amalgamated were down a little at the close in comparison with the closing figures of yesterday. Copper metal on the London market closed 1s 3d off in comparison with the close of yesterday. The general stock market of New York was steady and showed little change of any consequence.

Paine, Webber & Co., received the following closing letter from Foster at Boston: "The local market had the greatest activity yet seen on this movement. All classes of stocks steadily advanced during the morning hours and held their advance well when the market turned dull in the late dealings. Allouez was very strong, selling at 50, and Tamarack climbed easily to 51. Granby was very strong and active, selling at 59⅞, a new high record on this movement. The story of the day was one of pronounced strength and good buying in all the coppers. Tomorrow, being a holiday on the local board, many buying orders will probably collect and Saturday will see another active market with higher prices."

Gay & Sturgis today received the following closing copper letter from Sturgis at Boston: "The chief news today was in the doubling of Amalgamated dividend to a $4 regular basis. This is a very tangible and pertinent indication of the copper industry's betterment and will have a much more far-reaching influence than Amalgamated stockholders are concerned. The stock showed no indication either way after the declaration, although the increase was almost unanimously expected. The markets generally were active and buoyant. No cessation in the speculation was observable. After the local holiday tomorrow, the Boston market will likely take its incentive from the course of Amalgamated."

THE WAY IN GERMANY.

The Bystander: Last year a Russian traveler asked a Berlin railway official on which platform a train to a particular city would arrive. The official nodded to one side. The Russian interpreted this as permission to cross the rails in the direction of the nod.

A shunted engine went over him and cut off his arm. A week later in hospital he received a Strafmandat requiring him to pay 45 marks for "unauthorizedly, and to the state railway regulations contraryingly, crossing the line."

SEVEN HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIVE HEARTSICK MEN AND WOMEN TELL OF DISASTER AT SEA

ISMAY TELLS HOW TITANIC WENT DOWN

Managing Director of White Star Line Testifies Before U. S. Senators.

British Citizen Is Questioned Sharply as to Lifeboats on Vessel.

Tells of Efforts to Secure Safety of Women and Children.

New York, April 19.—The story of how the Titanic met its fate was told today to the United States senate investigation committee by J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the White Star line.

The details of the story were drawn out by Senator William Alden Smith, chairman of the special sub-committee charged with the examination of witnesses, and Senator Newlands, the other senator who came to New York to conduct the inquiry.

Mr. Ismay was accompanied by P. A. S. Franklin, vice president, and Emerson E. Parvin, secretary of the International Mercantile Marine. Besides the committee, Representative Hughes of West Virginia, whose daughter, Mrs. Lucien P. Smith, was saved and whose son-in-law was lost, was present. Another spectator was Truman H. Newberry, former assistant secretary of the navy.

On Voluntary Trip.

Although he came on a "voluntary trip," Mr. Ismay said his purpose was to see how the ship worked and in what manner she could be improved upon. A representative of the builder, Mr. Andrews, was on board, Mr. Ismay said.

"Did he survive?" asked Mr. Smith.

"Unfortunately, no."

Mr. Ismay said it was arranged between him and Capt. Smith of the Titanic not to arrive at New York lightship before 5 a. m. Wednesday.

"There would have been no advant-

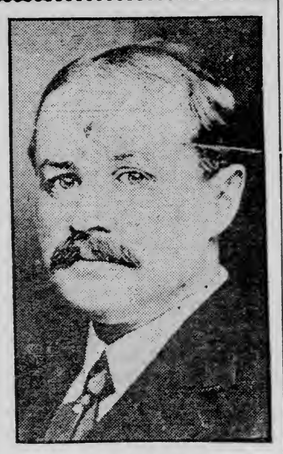
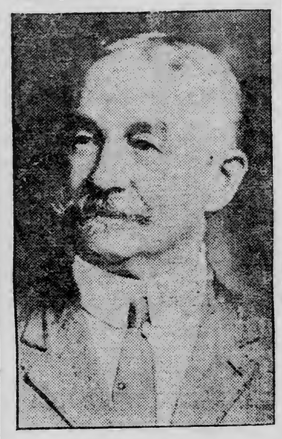
FOUND FOUR WERE DEAD UPON RAFT

Carpathia Passenger Tells About Picking Up Titanic Survivors.



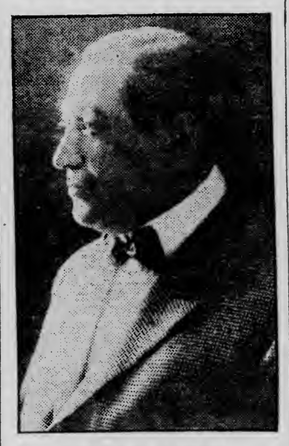
New York, April 19.—John R. Joyce, a banker of Carlsbad, N. M., a passenger on the Carpathia, said:

"When the Carpathia reached the scene of the wreck, we saw eighteen boats and one raft on the water. The Carpathia picked them all up. Four persons on the raft were dead. They were buried at sea on our way back to New York. A survivor told me that some of the Titanic's passengers jumped for the lifeboats, missed them, and were drowned. I heard nothing of Maj. Butt."



"How did Mr. Ismay get out?"

"Well, said Mr. Joyce, "he got into a lifeboat. On the Carpathia he went to a stateroom without saying a word. There was some criticism regarding him on board the boat, but he was not severely censured. Survivors said that everybody could have been saved if there had been enough lifeboats."



WENT DOWN WITH STEAMER TITANIC

J. B. THAYER,
Second Vice President of the Pennsylvania Railroad. He Lived at Haverport, Pa.

FRANK D. MILLET,
Noted Artist and Correspondent. He Was Born at Mattapoisett, Mass., in 1846. He Served in the Civil War as a Drummer Boy.

MOURN LOSS OF HUSBANDS

Mrs. W. B. Silvey and Mrs. Herbert Chaffee Safe in New York.

Miss Willard's Name Also Appears in Revised List of Survivors.

Suffering in no way physically, except from a slightly sprained ankle, Mrs. W. B. Silvey of Duluth is now at the Gotham hotel in New York.

No hope whatever that Mr. Silvey escaped from the Titanic is held out.

Mrs. Herbert Chaffee, of Amenia, N. D., who is very well known in Duluth, is at the Murray Hill hotel in New York. Mr. Chaffee was drowned when the Titanic sank.

Miss Constance Willard is believed to have been saved. Her name appears in the revised list of those who were rescued, and no word to the contrary has been received by her friends here.

No word has been received of John Hedberg of West Duluth. His name does not appear on either the list of those drowned or those saved. It is possible he did not sail on the vessel.

That, in brief, tells the fate of the six people in whom Duluthians were particularly interested.

A telegram was received from Mrs. Dwight E. Woodbridge, a sister of Mrs. Silvey, late last night. Mrs. Woodbrige stated that Mrs. Silvey was bearing the terrible shock well. Dr. and Mrs. Pease of Oswego, Mrs. Dessler of Washington and Miss Melville Silvey are also in New York. Mrs. Pease and Mrs. Dessler are sisters of Mr. Silvey. Mrs. Silvey, Miss Melville, her daughter, and Mrs. Woodbridge will probably return to Duluth within a day or two. No details of how Mr. Silvey and his wife became separated, and how Mr. Silvey met his death, have been received.

Word was received from Mrs. Chaffee in a telegram to R. N. Chaffee of Duluth. The telegram stated that Mrs. Chaffee was in good health physically, but suffering greatly from the mental shock, and very tired. She had no hope that her husband was saved.

WAVED FAREWELL TO THEIR WIVES

Deaths of Widener and Ryerson Told of By Woman.

New York, April 19.—George D. Widener, the wealthy Philadelphian, and Arthur L. Ryerson of New York went to their deaths like men, is the statement of Mrs. Ryerson to her brother-in-law, E. S. Ryerson, who resides here.

She says that when the women were put into the lifeboats they saw Mr. Ryerson and Mr. Widener standing upon the bridge of the Titanic, both waving their arms, throwing kisses and calling farewell to their wives and children. They believed there were boats enough for all. Mrs. Ryerson had her two daughters and a young son in the boat with her.

OFFICERS OF THE CARPATHIA SILENT

They Are Under Orders Not to Talk, Says Capt. Rostron.

New York, April 19.—Capt. A. H. Rostron of the Carpathia, who was in a state of great exhaustion last night when the steamer arrived here, is fast recovering and will soon be able to give a detailed account of the rescue of the passengers of the Titanic. When asked for a statement, Capt. Rostron said:

"I am all done up and cannot say a world. I should like very much to do so, but orders to me and to the rest of the ship's company make any statement from me absolutely impossible at this time. The statement will come later."

The story of the Carpathia rescue begins with the receipt of the Titanic's "S. O. S." early Monday morning. The passengers realized at once that there was something wrong when they were awakened from their sleep by the noise made by the crew in knocking blocks away from lifeboats. They also knew the ship had put about because of the sudden drop in the temperature.

PLAY BASEBALL FOR TITANIC RELIEF FUND.

New York, April 19.—President John T. Brush of the National league baseball team announced today that the Giants would plan an exhibition game with the Americans next Sunday afternoon at the Polo grounds for the benefit of the destitute survivors of the Titanic.

DULUTH MAN WHO PERISHED ON TITANIC

WILLIAM BEARD SILVEY.

William B. Silvey was 50 years old at the time of his death. He was born in Washington, D. C., the father being a United States army engineer. His mother is still living at Washington, but his father died several years ago. He is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. Pease of Oswego and Mrs. Dessler of Washington, his wife and one daughter, Miss Melville, who has been attending school in the east.

Mr. Silvey came to Duluth about twenty-three years ago. He always took an active part in both the business and public life of the city, although he never held any public office. He was at one time a member of the public affairs committee of the Duluth Commercial club, and at the time of his death was a member of the Kitchi Gami club. He was largely interested in the West Duluth Land company, and also in the Providence building. At one time he owned the lease on the Spalding hotel, but disposed of it a few years ago. He still owned the lease on the West Superior hotel.

Hays, wife of the president of the Grand Trunk railway, who went down with the ill-fated Titanic, and her two daughters, Mrs. Thornton Davidson Hays, were met by relatives and taken to the Grand Central station, where they left for Monertal on a special train.

Another survivor of the Titanic, Mrs. George Widener, whose husband was lost, hurried from New York on a special train to her home in Philadelphia.

TITANIC DEAD NUMBER 1,595

LOSS OF LIFE DUE TO LACK OF LIFEBOATS

Horror and Heroism, Suffering and Sorrow Stand Out Boldly in Their Stories.

Monster Iceberg Sends Finest Product of the Shipbuilders to Grave 2,000 Fathoms Deep.

(Additional Titanic Wreck News on Pages 4, 12, 14, 18 and 19.)

New York, April 19.—Seven hundred and forty-five persons, mostly women, sick at heart and body, wrote into the annals of maritime history today the loss of the finest and biggest ship ever built. They were the survivors of the White Star liner Titanic, which sank, bow foremost, with 1,595 souls aboard and her captain at the bridge, her colors flying and her band playing "Nearer, My God, to Thee" in 2,000 fathoms of water off the Banks of Newfoundland under starlit skies at 2:20 a. m. Monday, April 15.

With one voice they told of the splendid heroism of those who remained behind to find a watery grave that they might live.

Capt. Smith died, they said, as a gallant sailor should, after having placed all the women who would go, aboard the lifeboats. There were many who stayed behind to die in their husband's arms.

FACTS OF THE DISASTER.

From their narratives stand out in bold relief the following facts:

The Titanic was making 21 knots an hour when she struck the iceberg.

No one at first thought she would sink.

She remained afloat more than two hours.

The iceberg ripped open her bowels below the waterline.

Instant panic was averted by Capt. Smith's terse appeal to his crew: "Be British, my men!"

A small number of steerage passengers tried to rush for the lifeboats and were held back by the crew and other passengers.

The Titanic turned her nose for the bottom when the last lifeboat was less than 100 yards away, reared her stern high in the air and trembled for a moment before plunging into the depths.

THERE WERE TWO EXPLOSIONS.

There were two explosions when the cold water reached her boilers.

When she sank there was silence; a moment later the cries and supplications of 1,500 dying men rose in chorus indescribable over the spot where the vessel sank.

For hours the survivors rowed in lifeboats over a calm sea in bitter cold, until the Carpathia picked them up.

In the aftermath of the disaster the principal developments were the testimony of J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the White Star line, before the senate investigating committee, and the transfer of surviving members of the Titanic's crew aboard the Lapland.

ARMY OFFICER, WHO SANK WITH TITANIC, TELLS EXPERIENCES

Saved on Raft Amid Piteous Cries of Men for Whom There Was No Room.

Recounts Fearful Wait for Rescuers to Come to Them in Mid-Atlantic.

New York, April 19.—Col. Archibald Gracie, U. S. A., who jumped from the topmost deck of the Titanic as she sank, and swam about until he found a cork life raft and then helped rescue others who had jumped into the water, today told his story of the wreck and the rescue.

"The Titanic was struck by the berg on her port side," Col. Gracie said. "She was ripped from near the middle boat to the bow, after the fashion of a can opener opening a box of sardines. The compartments were closed immediately as far as possible under the circumstances.

"The interval between the collision and the sinking of the ship was two hours and twenty-two minutes, timed by my watch, which lay open on the dresser. The watch stopped at 2:22 a. m., when I jumped into the water. I was awakened in my cabin at midnight.

Sank With the Ship.

"After being drawn down with the ship, it appeared to me as if it were propelled by some great force through the water. This might have been occasioned by explosions under the

CHIEF TITANIC WIRELESS OPERATOR DIED UPON RAFT

New York, April 19. — Phillips, the first Marconi operator aboard the Titanic, stuck to his post until the last, jumped from the sinking ship, was taken aboard the life raft and died before rescuers reached him, according to the story told here today by Thomas Whitely, who was a waiter in the saloon of the Titanic.

Whitely is in St. Vincent's hospital, suffering from a fractured right leg and numerous bruises.

"Phillips was on the overturned lifeboat with me," Whitely said. "He was dead when taken aboard the Carpathia. They tried to revive him, but it was too late. There were four burials at sea—one sailor, two firemen and Phillips."

It is believed that Whitely's story clears the doubts surrounding the identity of the fourth man buried from the Carpathia. It was first believed that this man was a cabin passenger, but Whitely declares it was Phillips.

Helped Fill Boats.

"I helped fill the boats with women," Whitely said. "Collapsible No. 2 on the starboard jammed. The second officer was hacking at the ropes with a knife. I was being dragged around the deck by that rope when I looked up and saw the boat, with all aboard, turn turtle. I someway got overboard myself and clung to an oak dresser.

"I was not more than sixty feet from the Titanic when she went down. Her big stern rose up in the air and she went down bow first. I saw the machinery drop out of her.

"During the half hour I was in the water I could hear the cries of thousands of persons, it seemed, although there must have been only hundreds. I drifted near a boat wrongside up. About thirty men were clinging to her and they refused to let me get aboard. Someone tried to hit me with an oar, but I scrambled aboard.

"Hit of a Panic."

"There was a bit of a panic when it first happened. The officers had to use their revolvers. The chief officer shot one man—I didn't see this, but three others did—and then he shot himself. But everybody, pretty much, behaved splendidly, especially the firemen.

"It was a big berg we struck, and although the night was perfectly clear it was impossible to see the berg. I saw another like it when we were drifting on the overturned boat."

TORRENCE TRIAL ENDS

Case of Duluth Woman Presented to Jury for Second Time.

Prosecutor Brands "Persecution" and "Planting" Charges as Absurd.

MR. GREENE TO THE JURY.

"There is no persecution about this case. I am trying it because it is my business to try it. I think it is pretty generally understood—I thiuk that most people realize that this is not a question of persecution. There has been an indictment returned by the grand jury—that indictment charges Mrs. Torrence with having stolen property. I am trying this case, because i believe that there ought to be a conviction, but of course gentlemen it is not my opinion, but yours, that is to govern."

The Torrence larceny case, which has been hanging fire in district court for the past three weeks, during which time there was one mis-trial, went to the jury a second time in Judge Dancer's room late this afternoon.

The evidence was all in this morning and Prosecutor Greene made his closing arguments to the jury before the noon adjournment of the court. When the afternoon session opened at 2 o'clock, Mr. Nelson argued his side of the case, after which some instructions were given by Judge Dancer.

Prosecutor Greene branded as a pure absurdity the "planting" story of the defense. He declared that if the defense had not undertaken to blacken the reputation of the complaining witness, Mrs. Breckenridge, that Mrs. Torrence would have had no defense at all.

He said that all the talk about a "plant" was a huge joke, that it was preposterous and absurd. He asserted that the testimony of the Torrences had been colored so as to meet the situation and to indicate that Mrs. Breckenridge bore malice against the Torrences and that she had a motive for "planting" the goods there. He declared that on all material points, the witnesses for the state and for the defense told contradictory stories, and that it was simply a question of which was telling the truth.

Mr. Nelson, attorney for Mrs. Eleanor Torrence, the defendant, argued that the evidence did not point to any one person as being responsible for the crime, if one had been committed, and that the state had failed to identify the defendant with the charge.

He also dwelt upon the theory that Mrs. Breckenridge, the complaining witness, had "planted" the goods claimed to have been lost, in the Torrence apartments during their absence and that she directed the searches which were made by the detectives and showed them where most of the stuff was found.

Yesterday afternoon the state in rebuttal put Arnold Harris, 11-year-old son of Mrs. L. R. Harris, complaining witness in the first trial, who testified that on two occasions he had seen Mrs. Torrance walking around in Mrs. Breckenridge's apartments while the latter was away from home. The testimony of the boy followed that of Mrs. Torrance, who, when cross-examined by Mr. Greene, made a strenuous denial of ever having been in the rooms during the absence of Mrs. Breckenridge.

The boy was questioned qiute closely by Mr. Greene, but his story stood up under the cross-examination. During the cross-examination Attorney Nelson asked the boy how he knew that nobody else was in the room except Mrs. Torrence, he having testified that she had been standing by Mrs. Breckenridge's dresser when he first observed her.

"Well, if there was no one else in the room, I don't see what she wanted to run away for."

Attorney Nelson interrupted the testimony with an objection and asked the boy to be careful about drawing inferences. Others who were recalled in rebuttal were Mrs. Breckenridge, Detectives Terry and Bradley, Chief of Police Troyer, W. Hake, a delivery boy, and A. A. Farrington, official court reporter.

Miss Georgina Messier was the last witness called by the defense. She testified with regard to Mrs. Breckenridge's conduct while at the Messier home.

WELLAND TO BE ENLARGED

Canada Will Not Do Much Work on Canal This Year.

Ontario Government Takes Stand Against the Treating Habit.

Toronto, Ont., April 19.—The work of enlarging the Welland canal is to be started this year, but not till the fall and the commercial organizations of Ontario which asked for an immediate start are somewhat disappointed. The money to be spent this year amounts to only a couple of hundred thousand dollars, which leads the aforesaid commercial bodies to conclude that there isn't going to be very much work of construction done for a while. The conclusion is an apparently accurate one. The government has decided to deepen the canal, to alter the route, and to go ahead with the work, but before any construction is embarked upon the plans so far prepared will be checked by independent engineers and additional borings will be made.

The adoption of what is known as the Ten Mile creek route, decided upon by the government, will lessen the number of locks from twenty-two to six or seven. The canal will be deepened to allow the passage of vessels drawing twenty to twenty-two feet, the locks being constructed with a depth of thirty feet on the sills. The new Welland will have a length of 200 feet. It is expected that tenders will be called for in September, the preliminary work taking up all the intervening time. That means, of course, that there won't be much building done till next year, but the way will have been cleared and the details of the work decided upon.

The Lone Drink.

Even though the bar may not be banished, the lone drink and the Dutch treat may become the order of the day, and the only order which the courteous and obliging barkeep is legally authorized to recognize. This painful and disturbing prospect looms up by reason of the efforts which Sir James P. Whitney and Newton W. Rowell are making to get ahead of each other in the esteem of the Ontario electorate. The liberal leader, as already mentioned, is out for the abolishment of the bar. The premier comes along and says that he doesn't think present requirements call for the abolition of the bar, but he can and will stand for the discouragement and abolition of the treating habit. This, therefore, becomes the policy of the provincial government on the temperance question, and the policies of the provincial government have a way of sooner or later figuring in the statute books. That is the annoying feature from the viewpoint of the habitual recipient of fluids paid for by the other fellow.

The opposition policy goes farther, of course, but at the best it is only a policy and is not to be feared until such time as there is a possibility of the opposition beating the government at the polls and thus getting a chance to frame legislation. Thus what the man in the street (near the hotel), has to consider, is the Whitney proclamation that the government is against the treating habit. The hotelman doesn't like it because he fears that with treating made illegal there won't be much left of the bar, or at least of the bar trade. Lone drinking has never been recognized as good form in these parts, although practised at times more or less covertly in cases of financial stress and consuming thirst. Persons familiar with bar conditions assert that treating has been and is the chief support of the bar trade and that to abolish the one is in effect to abolish the other. The Liberal opposition in the legislature does not, of course, assent to this view.

Cost of Meats.

A report issued by the Ontario department of agriculture offers no hope of an immediate slump in the price of meats in this province. Householders who have been paying large sums all winter for pork and beef, or doing without pork and beef because prices were high, find no consolation in this report. They find on the contrary that beef cattle and store cattle are scarce and likely to be more scarce. They find also that the visible supply of pork is small and likely to be smaller.

The price of live hogs is up and swine are few in number. Hog raising used to be a great industry in Ontario. Then it suffered a decline because market conditions did not promise profits to the farmer on his hogs. Of recent years the industry has looked up, but now, it is said, the Ontario farmer is again coming to the point where he cannot see eye to eye with the packers as to what ought to be paid for a hog, and he threatens again to let the business go. The departmental report on the subject of cattle does not show any great degree of enthusiasm in the matter of quality. This is due to the long and hard winter, the unusual inroads made upon the supply of feed and of bedding, etc. Altogether the report is very far from optimistic.

New Judicial District.

The establishment of a new judicial district in Northern Ontario shows something of how much country there is between the present settled areas and James Bay.

The new judicial district of Temiskaming is a big one, and yet there is enough left of the old district of Nipissing and Sudbury to render the loss of the territory now set apart comparatively unimportant. The Temiskaming district is some 20,000 square miles in extent, running north from the big forest reserve to James Bay and east from the Albany river to the border of Quebec.

NEBRASKANS ARE VOTING

Statewide Primary Is Held on Wide Range of Offices.

Seven Candidates' Names Appear on the Presidential Tickets.

Omaha, Neb., April 19.—Nebraska voters today are expressing their choice for nominees for president, vice president, United States senators, congressmen, delegates to the national conventions, national committee men and all active state offices. The statewide primary campaign has been heated. State legislators must agree to support the primary choice for United States senator.

The names of seven candidates for president appear on the ballots, in the order named:

Republican—Robert M. La Follette, Theodore Roosevelt, William H. Taft.

Democratic—Champ Clark, Judson Harmon, Woodrow Wilson.

Prohibition—Eugene B. Chafin.

Wilson is also indorsed by the People's Independent party. In some counties his name appears as a Populist candidate, but he has asked that it be withdrawn.

For Senator.

Candidates for United States senator are Norris Brown and George W. Norris, Republicans, and Willis E. Reed, Former Governor Ashton C. Shallenberger, Robert F. Smith and W. H. Thompson, Democrats. All of the Democrats but Smith also appear as the People's Independent candidates.

The candidates for governor are Chester H. Aldrich and Jesse S. Newton, Republicans; Richard L. Metcalfe and John H. Moorehead, Democrats and People's Independents; Clyde J. Wright, Socialist, and Nathan Wilson, Prohibitionist.

One of the hottest fights of the campaign is being made on the position of national committeeman, Victor Rosewater, representing the Taft faction, and R. B. Howell of the Roosevelt forces, are the republican candidates. Rosewater is the present incumbent. Charles Fanning, a Harmon man, and P. L. Hall, who is identified with the Wilson forces and has the support of W. J. Bryan, oppose each other on the democratic ticket.

Bryan for Delegate.

Bryan is a candidate for delegate at large to the democratic national convention. Much interest is being displayed in his campaign because of his recent statement that in case of his selection as a delegate and Harmon's indorsement as the pouplar choice, he will not serve.

Congressmen will be named in all six districts. Nebraska has no congressman at large.

Returns will be late. The polls opened at 8 o'clock this morning and will close at 9 o'clock tonight. Should the races be close it may be late tomorrow before definite results will be known.

The republican ballot, which contains the largest number of names, is more than eight feet long. The democratic ballot is about six feet long. The other three are shorter.

The People's Independent ballot contains many names that are on the democratic list. The names of all candidates of each party and a list of the proposed constitutional amendments are printed on single ballots.

Women may vote for school officers. In the past they have been well represented at the polls.

There were forty-six applications filed with the city clerk for saloon licenses which were referred to the license committee with instructions to report at an adjourned meeting on Thursday evening, at which time the council has to wrestle with the problem of reducing the number of saloons to meet the requirements of the Warner Crampton law which is one saloon to every 500 inhabitants. According to Ironwood's population of 15,000, Ironwood would be entitled to twenty-six saloons.

LONG LIST OF BIDS OPENED

Board Will Let Contracts for Three Important Street Improvements.

Bids for Laying Cement and Plank Walks Also Received.

The board of public works today opened a number of bids for important contracts, but the successful bidders will not be known until this afternoon.

Three street jobs which will have an important bearing on proposed street car extensions are among them. One calls for the grading and graveling of Sixth avenue east from Fifth to Tenth streets; another for the grading and graveling of Ninth street from Seventh avenue east to Chester park, and the third for the improvement of Third avenue east from Mesaba avenue to Fifteenth street, Fifteenth street to the Swan lake road and the Swan Lake road to the sand pit.

It is expected that as soon as the first two are completed the street car company will begin laying tracks for the proposed hillside extension in the Second ward. The proposed route is up Fifth avenue east from Fourth street to Fifth street, on Fifth street to Sixth avenue east, on Sixth avenue east to Ninth street, and on Ninth street to Chester park. That district has settled rapidly in recent years and the street car company has stated that it has had the materials on hand for the last year, waiting for the city to get the highways in condition for the tracks.

The other improvement will also have a bearing on future street car extension into the territory tributary to Duluth, lying back of the hills.

Bids for the laying of cement and plank walks in all parts of the city were also opened this morning.

MR. WURTELE INSTALLED.

Former Duluth Rector Is Given New Rochester Charge.

Rochester, Minn., April 19.—A service seldom witnessed in an Episcopal church was held here Wednesday night when Bishop Samuel Edsall of the diocese of Minnesota instituted Rev. Arthur H. Grand Forks, N. D., April 19.—Mrs. Anna Button shot and killed herself in the Great Northern station here Wednesday night in the presence of scores of passengers who thronged the platform. She was the wife of a well-known business college man who has colleges at various points in Northern Minnesota.

SAYS CAPTAIN SPOKE CHEERILY

New Orleans Woman Tells of Leaving Her Son on the Titanic.

New York, April 19.—Mrs. Alexander T. Compton and her daughter, Miss Alice Compton, of New Orleans, two of the Titanic's rescued, reached New York prostrated over the loss of Mrs. Compton's son, Alexander, who went down with the big liner.

"When we waved goo-bye to my son," said Mrs. Compton, "we did not realize the great danger, but thought we were only being sent out in the boats as a precautionary measure. When Capt. Smith handed us life preservers he said cheerily: 'They will keep you warm if you do not have to use them.' Then the crew began clearing the boats and putting the women into them. My daughter and I were lifted into the boats commanded by the fifth officer."

SHOWS LACK OF BOATS ON SHIPS

German Paper Prints Table of Contrasts on Atlantic Liners.

Frankfort, Germany, April 19.—The Frankfort Gazette today prints a table of ten of the principal trans-Atlantic steamers, contrasting their boat accommodations with the numbers of the passengers and crews and showing the number of persons for whom no boat accommodation is provided. The list demonstrates that the number of persons unprotected ranges from 1,475 to 3,070.

WANTS RIGHT TO ORDER WIRELESS

Navy Department Will Press for Legislation By Congress.

Washington, April 19.—The government's inability to get early information regarding the loss of the Titanic through the wireless outfits of the scout cruisers Chester and Salem or the naval shore stations, has confirmed the navy department in its decision to press for legislation by congress which will enable the government to assert control over all agencies, whether private or corporate, which may seek to restrain or interfere with the government officials in such cases as this.

Secretary Meyer, who was one of the parties to the conference recently held at the White House on the subject of wireless control, is giving the subject much attention, and either from the navy department or the department of commerce and labor a bill will soon emerge which it is hoped will be accepted by congress as a basis for its action.

age in arriving earlier," he added.

"During your voyage did you know you were in the vicinity of ice?" Senator Smith asked.

"I knew some had been reported," replied the witness.

He said the ship was not in proximity to icebergs Saturday or Sunday, although he knew the ship would be near Sunday night. The witness said he knew nothing of the Amerika and the Titanic talking by wireless about icebergs.

Sent No Message.

Senator Smith asked if he sought to send any wireless messages from the Titanic after she struck. He said no.

Turning to the subject of lifeboats, Mr. Ismay said he heard the captain give the order to lower the boats.

"I then left the bridge," said the official.

The boats, he said, he saw lowered and filled. In his own boat were four members of the crew and forty-five passengers.

"Was there any jostling or attempts by men to get into the boats" asked Senator Smith.

"I saw none."

"How were the women selected?"

"We picked the women and children as they stood nearest the rail."

How He Left Titanic.

When asked the circumstances under which he left the boat, Mr. Ismay replied almost in a whisper:

"One of the boats was being filled. Officers called out to know if there were any more women to go. There were none. No passengers were on the deck. As the boat was being lowered I got into it."

Representative Hughes handed Senator Smith a note and then the chairman told Mr. Ismay that it was reported that the second lifeboat left without its full complement of oarsmen, and from 11:30 until 7:20 women were forced to row the boat.

"I know nothing about it," he replied.

Representative Hughes' Daughter was in a boat and was assigned to watch the cork in the boat and if it came out to use her finger as a stopper.

Mr. Ismay was asked how long he mained on the injured ship.

"That would be hard to estimate," he responded. "Almost until she sank. Probably an hour and a quarter."

Then Senator Smith asked the circumstances under which he left the boat.

"The boat was being filled," began Mr. Ismay. "The officers called out to know if there were any more women to go. There were none. No passengers were on the deck. So, as the boat was being lowered, I got into it."

Was Sinking When He Left.

"The ship was sinking?" asked Senator Smith.

"The boat was sinking," almost whispered Mr. Ismay.

"Was there any attempt to lower the boats of the Carpathia to take on passengers after you went aboard her?" asked Senator Smith.

"There were no passengers to take on," said Mr. Ismay.

"In your lifeboat what course did she take?" the senator asked.

"We saw a light and headed for it," Mr. Ismay said.

"How long were you in this lifeboat?"

"About four hours."

"Were there any lifeboats that you saw?"

"Yes, we hailed one," he said. He said he saw no liferafts in the sea.

"How many lifeboats were there on the Titanic?"

"Twenty altogether, I think," said Mr. Ismay, "sixteen collapsible and four wooden boats."

Whether the boats were taken on board the Carpathia or not he did not know.

"Were all the lifeboats which left the Titanic accounted for?"

"I think so; I've been told so, but I do not know it of my own knowledge."

"It has been suggested," Senator Smith continued, "that two of the lifeboats sank as soon as lowered. Do you know anything about that?"

"I do not. I never heard of it and I think all the lifeboats were accounted for."

Did Not See Her Sink.

"Did you see the Titanic sink?"

"I did not see the Titanic go down," Mr. Ismay said, shaking his head mournfully. "I did not want to see her go down. I was rowing in the lifeboat all the time until we were picked up. I turned back only once after we left the vessel. I saw her green light and never turned back again. I did not want to see the end."

"When you last saw her were there indications that the Titanic had broken in two?"

"No, there was no such indication," said Mr. Ismay.

"How long after you left her was it that you looked back for the last time?"

"It may have been ten minutes or a half hour. I am not sure. Impossible for me to tell."

"Was there confusion on the Titanic when you looked back?"

"I didn't see any," Mr. Ismay declared. "All I saw was the green light the last time I looked."

"After you left Capt. Smith on the bridge did you see him again?"

"I did not."

"Did you have any message from him?"

"None."

Two Wireless Operators.

"How many wireless operators were there on the Titanic?"

"I presume there were two," said Mr. Ismay. "One is always on watch."

"Did they survive?"

"I have beeen told one did, but I do not know whether it is true or not."

"Were any of crew enlisted men in the English navy?"

"I do not know."

Mr. Ismay said he would have known if there had been an explosion on board, but that there was none.

In response to a question, the witness estimated the speed of the ship when she struck at twenty-one knots.

Senator Smith asked the witness if he had anything to do with selecting the crew of his lifeboat.

"I did not," was the snappy response.

"No rafts were on board because I presume they are not regarded as suitable," the witness said.

"Can you tell us," Senator Smith asked, "anything about the inspection certificate that was issued for the Titanic before she sailed?"

"I know that the government inspection was thorough."

Had Full Quota of Boats.

"Do you know whether the Titanic had its proper number of lifeboats?"

"Yes, she had."

"Do you know whether the boat you were in was a Titanic lifeboat or one that had been taken from some other White Star ship?"

"I did not notice the name on the oar or the boat, but I am sure it was a new lifeboat."

Mr. Ismay declared that the ship was specially constructed so that with any two of the larger compartments in the ship full of water she still would float.

"If the ship had struck head-on she would in all human probability be afloat today," he said.

"Did any of the collapsible boats sink?"

"No, sir."

"Did you attempt to interfere with the working of the wireless on the Carpathia?" he was asked.

Stayed in Stateroom.

"The captain probably will tell you I was not out of my room from the time I got into it until last night," was the reply.

As a final question in his examination, Mr. Ismay was asked what he had on when he got into the lifeboat.

"A pair of slippers, a pair of pajamas, a suit of clothes and an overcoat," he replied.

Mr. Ismay was asked to hold himself in readiness during the day for another call before the committee. Senator Smith announced it was desired to hear the captain of the Carpathia in the meantime.

MARCONI DEFENDS WIRELESS SERVICE

Says Vessels Will Be Compelled to Use Up to Date Apparatus.

New York, April 19.—That the interference of amateur wireless operators had little or nothing to do with the difficulties which the shore stations have experienced during the last two days in getting news from the Carpathia is the opinion expressed by William Marconi, the inventor.

"Any explanation of the reason why detailed news of the disaster did not come from the Carpathia lies with the ship's captain or Mr. Ismay," said Marconi. "They are responsible for the silence. The wireless was not to blame. Private messages and messages regarding the business of the line passed promptly and continuously. The wireless situation in New York has been unusually active, of course, but there was no serious interference with legitimate business. There doubtless were reasons that prompted the Carpathia officials to defer sending out news of the disaster. The wireless was ready to carry such business if it had been forthcoming."

Must Improve Service.

Mr. Marconi believes that steamship owners will be forced by the Titanic disaster to install greatly improved outfits. He said:

"Every passenger carrying vessel should be equipped with up-to-date wireless apparatus. Some of that now in use needs improvement and modernization. If the Carpathia had met with a disaster similar to that which struck the Titanic, messages sent from her would not have reached other vessels. The wireless system on the Carpathia has a ratio of only about 150 miles, the Mauritania and other large vessels have wireless systems with a range of at least 500 miles. Under such conditions the general public would have had early information concerning the Titanic disaster."

TRAMP IS KILLED WHILE STEALING RIDE.

Bismarck, N. D., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—John Roberts, a tramp, tried to board a moving freight train at Dawson, but was thrown under the wheels and crushed, living only a few hours, one leg being amputated. Roberts was 66 years old. His relatives have not been located.

WILL WRITE TO MOTHERS.

Bismarck, N. D., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—Many of the inmates of the penitentiary here, it is expected, will observe Mother's day, May 12, by writing to their mothers. Warden F. O. Hellstrom has issued an order that convicts who write letters to their mothers on that day, shall have the privilege of writing one extra letter.

There are over 300 inmates in the penitentiary, and it is expected that fully 150 of them will take advantage of the spirit of the day.

FIGURING ON RESULT

Can Taft Be Nominated in View of Roosevelt Victories?

Can the Democrats Win Without New York or Ohio?

(By Willis J. Abbot.)

Washington, April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—It is easy enough to insist that the Roosevelt victories in Illinois and Pennsylvania argue his certain nomination. All the same, it is worth while to bear in mind that Mr. Taft was nominated without New York, Pennsylvania or Indiana. That he can be nominated again without either of these states, and even with Illinois added to them, is a mere matter of mathematical computation. But that he can be elected without them—well, that is a differen story.

Hope, it is well known, springs quadrennially if not eternally in the Democratic breast. About once in four years under the Bryan leadership the Democrats have figured out the way in which they can elect their ticket without New York or Ohio. The figures have always been plausible, the result always deplorable. If the Democracy is going to try that proposition once again, it will meet the same disaster.

How About Pennsylvania?

Personally, I do not believe that any ticket labelled "Democratic" can by any possibility carry the state of Pennsylvania. But it is fair to express the opinion of some of the Democratic congressmen from that state who take sharp issue with me. Says Congressman Diffenderfer, for example:

"If Roosevelt is nominated he will sweep the state."

"Has any Republican in fifty years failed to sweep your state?" he was asked.

"Well, no," he admitted, reluctantly. "But the state is verging on Democracy this year. The only man who can keep it out of the Democratic column is Roosevelt. Personally, I think we could make the best fight with Wilson, but Champ Clark would be all right, and Harmon, if he will ever get into the fighting line, will suit our people."

Says Maine Will Go Democratic.

It is interesting to note how many states, normally Republican, are now through their congressional spokesmen, being described as Democratic. Maine, for example, is one. Both of its senators—Johnson and Gardner—are Democrats. But Maine never cast a Democratic electoral vote since the Civil war days. Now the senators believe that it will stand for the Democratic nominee. Both are mildly for Wilson. Both would like to be for Harmon. However, Wilson has the delegates. The same situation exists in New Hampshire and Vermont.

It is well enough to consider, if one is trying to figure what the Baltimore convention will do, just what is the present state of the various candidates. Governor Wilson has 96 votes. His own state has not spoken and while he will lose some of its delegates it will still add largely to his vote. Speaker Clark has 131, all from his immediate neighborhood—Missouri, Illinois, Kansas and the rest. Governor Harmon has a beggarly 12, but Ohio has not spoken. Moreover, there is a growing opinion that the Harmon strength is not shown wholly in the newspaper columns. Washington opinion is not the best, but Washington opinion today is that Harmon will go into that convention with comparatively few delegates and go out with the nomination.

Discussing the Titanic.

Congress is always ready to provide for the correction of an evil after some great disaster has made that evil notable. Just now the loss of the steamship Titanic has suddenly started the statesmen to discussing the various ways of averting any future disasters of that character. Whether any law can be passed to control this particular matter is hardly open to discussion. When ships are out of the three mile limit they are in no way responsible to the United States government. Whether something might not be done by international agreement is quite another matter. At present an international agreement sends the ocean liners south of the course which the Titanic was taking, after May 1 in order that the danger of floating ice may be avoided. But it i s not at all probable that even that agreement could be enforced. In the end the matter will come up to the discretion of the traveling public, notwithstanding all congressional efforts to establish a law. Congress can do much by making an investigation of this disaster and of others that have taken place on or near the New Foundland banks, where fog is the rule and icebergs not infrequent. A careful compilation of that record and its distribution through congressional sources will lead people who are afflicted with the speed mania to travel by the lines which take the longer, but the safer course far to the south. The course across the New Foundland banks, as one of the best known commanders said to me today, is dangerous at all times—dangerous alike to the ship which follows it and the hosts of little fishing vessels which are always there plying their trade and which are continually run down by the ocean Leviathans without report and apparently without compunction. The two greatest marine disasters in the last fifteen years have occurred on the banks, the loss of La Bourgogne and the present loss of the Titanic. One was due to fog, the other to ice. It is quite probable that the United States bureau of navigation will make a strenuous recommendation that the course of passenger ships shall no longer be laid through the fog and ice belt.

TONIGHT'S ATTRACTIONS.

LYCEUM—Homer's Odyssey.
ORPHEUM—Vaudeville.
EMPRESS—Vaudeville.

Amusement Notes.

Especially appealing to the students of Greek, Homer's "Oyssey" has a general interest for every one. The world loves a hero, and "The Odyssey" tells of one that for thirty centuries has been the model for playwrights and authors.

Homer's "Odyssey" has been produced in moving pictures, a $200,000 production. It is being shown at the Lyceum this week.

Next Sunday night and matinee an opportunity will be afforded at the Lyceum theater to witness what is said by the dramatic critics to be the most charming Western play since "The Virginian." The attraction is Willard Mack's great Western comedy drama "In Wyoming."

Theatergoers will see the Highland comedy, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," earlier than was expected, when the play opens at the Lyceum Monday, April 22 for five nights with a Wednesday matinee with a company of imported players organized especially for the production which is en route for San Francisco, where they are to play a four months' engagement during the coming summer. This was made necessary because the London success was duplicated in New York and Chicago, and the stay in the two latter cities promises to run indefinitely, which necessitated the importation of a third company specially selected by Graham Moffat, the author of the play, for the larger cities of the United States and Canada, and for the San Francisco run. Mr. Moffat is an actor, and with several members of his family is playing in the London production. Until "Bunty" saw the light of day the Moffat family was confined to the smaller cities of Scotland producing Scotch plays, and to only indifferent business. Then "Bunty" was produced in London, and inside of six months the fame of Graham Moffat, author, became an international by-word in the theatrical profession, and he is classed with such writers as W. J. Gilbert and J. M. Barrie. In fact, "Bunty," is making just such another furore as did "Pinafore" some thirty odd years ago.

New York and Chicago at the present time are "Bunty" mad, so much so that all kinds of merchandise is being named after it. New York now has the "Bunty" hat, "Bunty" cigars, "Bunty" collars, "Bunty" corsets, "Bunty" skirts, and "Bunty" What-Nots.

The bill which will open Sunday afternoon at the Orpheum theater promises to be one of the most elaborate of the season to date. It will be headlined by Mlle. Simone de Beryl, the famous Parisian beauty who was brought to this country for the opening of the "Folies Bergere" in New York. After this extensive novelty ran its course, Mlle. de Beryl started out over the Orpheum circuit. She appears in a posing act which is said to be different from anything of its kind yet seen in vaudeville.

"Honor Among Thieves," the comedy dramatic sketch which was the feature of the Orpheum road show this season, will be seen on next week's bill. It is acclaimed as the best comedy sketch on the circuit at the present time.

The Ritchies will present what is generally conceded to be the best comedy and trick bicycle act on the circuit.

Al and Fannie Steadman, a very popular team in vaudeville, will appear with an act consisting of some piano playing, some singing, some dancing and a very generous measure of comedy.

The Tuxedo Comedy Four is a male quartet featuring popular and comedy songs. They have been very warmly received around the circuit and are expected to be one of the real hits of next week's bill.

There will be three more performances of this week's bill, one this evening, and tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow night. The present week's offering, while it contains no widely headed feature act, has been a very popular one with Orpheum patrons.

Those who have attended the Empress this week expecting to see one of the conventional mind-reading acts have been greatly disappointed as In Sa-Hera they have seen an exponent of the mind-reading art whose work is far removed from that of any act of a similar nature yet seen in Duluth. Her methods of working are entirely different, as she uses no confederates nor does she answer any questions that have been written upon pads or papers which makes the chances for fraud or fake very small. Yet under these conditions she answers questions of all natures with an accuracy and ease that is nothing short of marvelous. Another feature of her work is the fact that it is not necessary for her to get the questions from her manager, but the party desiring information can ask the question of her direct and in every instance this week she has promptly given the correct answer to each question. The manner in which she accomplishes her work is simply baffling the public. She claims nothing supernatural for her work, neither does she claim any gift, but merely states that she accomplishes her work scientifically, but it has been a puzzle to the Empress audiences this week as to how it is done.

ASHLAND MURDER TRIAL.

Ashland, Wis., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—Alvin Davis charged with killing Thomas Pruess here last December is on trial in the circuit court. Two of the state's principal witnesses gave damaging testimony against the accused. These are B. D. Zazada, clerk of the Tremont house, and Dan Monroe, a woodsman. Zazada testified that he saw Davis strike Pruess several times and then walk away a few steps and then return and strike him again with such force that he was knocked to the stone walk, the force of the fall or the blow making him unconscious. Zazada declared that he yelled at Davis, "You've killed him."

Monroe, who was an eyewitness, swore that he saw Davis start hitting Pruess, and that he struck him a number of times. His testimony corroborated what Zazada had said.

Both Monroe and Pruess were strangers in Ashland. Davis contended that Pruess had insulted his wife, while she was alone in front of the Tremont hotel, and that was why he assaulted him.

GLEANED ALONG THE POLICE RUN

Fire in the residence of Louis Lewandowski at 518 East Eleventh street about 10 o'clock last night demonstrated the vast superiority of motor apparatus over horse-drawn rigs in giving protection to the hillside district.

Because of the absolute inability of the horses to make time up the steep grades for so long a distance the damage was estimated at $300. Had the department been equipped with a motor hose wagon the loss would have been not to exceed $50.

When the alarm sounded the auto salvage wagon and the chief's automobile made record time to the scene, preceding the other apparatus by a considerable interval. Both of these are fitted out with fire extinguishers, but the blaze was too far along for them to be very effective. The fire kept gaining on them steadily, running up from the basement to the attic. Had a stream of water and a crew of the hose wagon been on the ground with the salvage cart and the chief it would have been a matter of but a few minutes to squelch the blaze. As it was the horses toiled up the heavy grade at a walk, with the men walking alongside. In the meantime the fire steadily grew worse, although held considerably in check by the men with the extinguishers.

A contract was recently awarded for the erection of a new fire hall at Seventh avenue east and Ninth street. This will relieve the situation considerably in that locality. But even this district would have far more protection if the motor apparatus were installed. Eventually this will be done throughout the city. Those who have made it their business to familiarize themselves with the conditions assert that this should be done at the earliest possible date. By so doing, they confidently declare, that the efficiency of the department would be increased several times over, especially where long runs are necessary.

The new automobile for Chief Randall is not yet in service, but it is believed that it will be ready for use within a few weeks. When it arrives his present car will be equipped with a large chemical tank and turned over to First Assistant Chief Granzow in the West end, who has many long runs to make. The next step will probably be to furnish a car for Second Assistant C. W. Wilson, who has many long runs to make in both the eastern and western sections of the city.

Patrolmen Setterquist and Winters last evening arrested five boys in the West end on charges of obstructing the sidewalks. The officers reported that the boys have been in the habit of congregating on the street corners in the vicinity of Thirty-ninth and Fortieth avenue west and Third street and have persistently refused to follow instructions to disperse.

It was alos stated that the residents in the enighborhood have repeatedly complained of the boys, claiming that they had become a nuisance. In some instances it was claimed that they had made remarks to women and girls who chanced to pass them.

The court informed the boys that such conduct cannot be tolerated and that if they are brought in again they will be dealt with severely. Those who received suspended sentences today gave their names as Lynn Thompson, Frank McDonald, Oscar Bastrom, George Nelson and Edwin Norstad.

Incidentally, citizens in other parts of the municipality have remarked that it might have a salutary effect if the provisions of the recently-amended ordinance were more strictly enforced. That particular part of the West end is not the only locality where boys have made themselves obnoxious by acting in a similar manner.

George Curtis, 66 years old, colored, denied that he was drunk yesterday afternoon when arraigned in police court with the grist today.

Patrolman George Winters, who made the arrest, happened to be in the court room on the case mentioned above, and he was put on the stand. "He was staggering all around and was so wobbly on his legs that I had to half carry him to the police station," he testified.

The aged negro was on his feet in a second. "I didn't see that man at all," he averred, and shook his head to emphasize it when a spontaneous roar greeted his statement. "I was playing with my little grandson," he continued, when the mirth subsided. "My daughter was washing and we just had a little can between us."

However, it appeared that the "little can" had been quenching their thirst most of the afternoon, and George was found guilty. The daughter, who had been arrested at the same time, forfeited $10 bail when her name was called.

Arvid Ahonen's version of going slow doesn't agree with that of Patrolman Peter Barber, who arrested him near the Auditorium last night on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Arvid said that he was going towards his home at a slow gait when the officer caught him. The bluecoat stated that Arvid was traveling at top speed after breaking away from him, but that he slowed up when some one tripped him, pitching him to the walk, after which he kept him "slow" until Patrolman David Olson helped him take to the station.

It appears that Arvid was blocking the entrance to the place and was told to move along. He started but did not keep going. When the cop next saw him he asserts that he had his hand in his hip pocket in a suspicious manner, whereupon he started to search him, precipitating a scuffle, which resulted in Arvid making a break for his liberty. He pleaded not guilty and his trial set later in the day.

John Farley, arrested at the same place on a charge of trespass pleaded not guilty and his hearing fixed for the afternoon. It is claimed that he was trying to see a wrestling match on the interior without paying, by looking through a window.

When John Erickson came down from the tall timbers a couple of days ago "he planted" part of his wad and set out with the balance to have a "good time." He started out with the deliberate intention of getting "soused to the eye brows."

He did.

Yesterday morning he was picked up by the police with a "glorious package." He was "stewed to the guards," and when he landed in the bull pen he didn't know whether he was coming or going.

In the afternoon John was brought into court, having sobered up sufficiently to be arraigned. He was real frank about it and said that as he had had his jag as per schedule, he would carry out the rest of it by getting back to work again. Sentence was suspended.

Martin Hanson was in pretty bad shape today when brought in with the grist to answer a charge of drunkenness. He had been arrested several times before and on pleading guilty he got $10 and costs or ten days in the county jail.

A car of coke caught fire in the railroad yards near Twentieth avenue west about 6 o'clock last evening. The fire department squelched it in a few minutes. It is believed to have been started by sparks from a passing engine. The damage was slight.

MARINE

WAITING FOR OPEN WATER

Fleet of at Least Twenty Boats Will Be Ready to Sail.

Fully 5,000,000 Bushels of Grain Loaded—Activity in Harbor.

It is estimated that 5,000,000 bushels of grain have been loaded upon boats which have wintered in the Duluth-Superior harbor.

All the boats are waiting only for the signal that there is a fair chance of getting through. All of the grain is from Western Canada and is for export.

Never was there such an eagerness to get away for the first trip as there is this year. Nearly all the boats in the local harbor have been engaged for the first trip and there will be work for all. Some of the boats are holding off for an increase in the rate and vesselmen are of the opinion that they will finally get it.

The steamers Joseph Wood, Wainwright, Walter Scranton, Caldera, H. B. Bope, Livingstone and W. W. Brown are already loaded and are awaiting the signal to get away.

The steamers Ball Brothers, Sylvania, Scoupa, Western Star, J. E. Davidson, A. E. Stewart, W. H. Gratwick, Norway, Heffelfinger, White and several others are getting under the spouts in their turn. As soon as one boat is loaded tugs tow it to a position in the harbor and another boat is moved under the spouts as quickly as possible.

Activity is stamped all over the harbor front. Fitting out operations are in full swing on nearly every boat in the harbor. The package freighters having been fitted out are now loading.

Local vessel men estimate that the first movement of boats down the lake will carry some 5,000,000 bushels of grain. It is thought the movement will be heavier if the boats can be secured.

The local elevators being well filled, much grain yet to be shipped to Duluth from Canada and the fact that navigation is later in opening this year, make the rush all the greater.

Grain Rate May Advance.

While charters are still being made at 1⅜ cents on grain to Buffalo, it is thought that the rate will advance within the next few days. As the time draws nearer for the actual operation of boats, the congestion becomes greater and the need of swift moving more imperative.

Some of the vessel owners are holding back, hoping that the raise will come. At least one vessel agent is holding back for the increase.

When the boats finally get away there will probably be about twenty in the fleet which will steam out of the local ship canal.

Whitefish Bay Said to Be Open.

In a message to a local agent this morning, Capt. Root of Sault Ste. Marie, states that the ice is practically out of Whitefish bay and that boats will be able to get through by April 25. It was thought Whitefish bay would be the point at which the boats would be held up on their first trip. Capt. Root says that with favorable winds, boats can get through by the date mentioned.

It is reported that the ice at Lime Island is still thick, but that it is rotting quickly and will not interfere with navigation after a few days time.

Package Freight Business Brisk.

The package freighters are busy fitting out and loading. The Mutual engineers arrived yesterday and a number of the boats of that line have steam up today. The boats will be sent to the different docks for loads as soon as they are ready, the local agents already having cargoes lined up for them. Every package freight steamship office in the city is now rushed with orders.

Boats Out of Drydock.

The steamers J. W. Rhodes and City of Bangor, both having wintered at Duluth and both having undergone repairs at the Superior drydock, were towed today to the elevators where they were scheduled to take on grain for Buffalo.

The steamer Buffalo of the Western Transit company was taken to the drydock today to have a new rudder fitted on.

Mud Hole Cleaned Out.

For the first time in years the Mud Hole or the Quebec Channel as it is called by marine men generally, presents a lonesome appearance, many of the boats which have been laid up there for two years, having been taken away, fitted out and loaded with grain. Every port on the lakes has a mud hole at which the idle boats have been laid up for several seasons past. It is thought that there will not be an idle boat on the lakes during the coming season. At this time it looks most auspicious to marine men.

Coal Ready for Shipment.

From points down the lakes comes the report that many boats have been loaded with coal for Duluth and that the first fleet will leave for this port as soon as possible. The local docks are almost clean, shipments out of the city having been ordered stopped some days ago.

The rush is with grain from this end of the chain of lakes and with coal from the other. The season opens more like the rush season of 1907 than any season since that great year on the lakes.

Allen Will Sail New Boat.

Samuel E. Allen, formerly master of the Henry H. Rogers, will sail the Palmer for a time or until Captain Chambers, the regular master of the Rogers, has recovered from his illness. Captain Allen will then take out the new steamer James A. Farrell, now in process of completion and named after the president of the United States Steel corporation.

First Ore Shipments.

The first ore shipments of the season were received at the Allouez docks of the Great Northern railroad in Superior yesterday. The train was the first of the season and depending on how fast the boats are able to take out the commodity, the trains will run regularly from this time on until late in the season.

Conference at Cleveland.

Captain George H. Vroman, manager of the local branch of the Union Towing company, is in Cleveland, where he was called to attend the conference between the officials of the company and the L. T. P. A. Captain Green represents the tugmen of this port at the meeting, which is the second one held since January, the first being adjourned after the two sides failed to agree on certain points. It is thought that matters will be settled within a few days and that agreements will be signed for the season, the differences, it is said, being slight.

Alvina Reaches New York.

The local yacht Alvina, property of T. F. Cole of this city, was scheduled to reach New York today. A letter received in the city, mailed by one of the crew at Havana, contained the information.

FLAGS FLYING AT HALF MAST

Flags on the Anchor line vessels Delaware and Conemaugh, now in Duluth harbor, are flying at half-mast, out of respect to J. B. Thayer, second vice president of the Pennsylvania railroad, and president of the Anchor line.

A telegram was received this morning by M. S. Mead, local agent of the line, from J. C. Evans, vice president of the Anchor line. Mr. Evans stated that he had received word that Mr. Thayer was not on the Carpathia, and there is no doubt but that he was drowned when the Titanic sank.

STEAMSHIP COMPANY CLAIMED TO BE BANKRUPT.

Chicago, April 19.—A petition was filed in the United States district court yesterday afternoon asking for the appointment of receivers for the Chicago & Duluth Transportation company. The complainants are creditors of the company, who allege insolvency.

The Chicago & Duluth Transportation company was incorporated under the laws of the state of Indiana in 1909, and prior to that time had been operated under the name of the Prindiville Transportation company. The capital stock of the company is $175,000, and the bond issue on which the interest is alleged to be overdue is of $275,000.

Counsel for the stockholders of the company acquiesced in the receivership proceedings.

Mrs. Chaffee will come here just as soon as she is able to travel. THE PITY OF IT!

Driving at full speed through the night, under orders from the owners to make the trip in the shortest possible time, entering without slackening the pace a region where there were icebergs of which full warning had been given, the Titanic struck the submerged portion of an iceberg which it had sighted only a quarter of a mile away—too late to check the speed.

The boat struck the ice a glancing blow which ripped her side cruelly open beneath the water line. Water entered which soon penetrated to the boilers, the explosion of which hastened the final catastrophe.

The officers and crew did what they could, but they hadn't boats enough, and the possibility of calamity had not been considered to such an extent as to cause any adequate preparation, even in the way of proper lifeboat drills. So it was that not even the scanty handful of boats that were available were filled to their capacity. They could have carried 950, and they brought away but 745.

The horror of what happened loses none of its freshness in the delayed reports of the details, given tonight. That men of all stations in life stood calmly back at the word "Women and children first;" that though in accordance with custom the sailors were armed with guns to prevent a rush for the boats they were not needed; that as the ship made its last awful plunge, the captain stood on his bridge and the band sent out over the dark waters the thrilling agony of "Nearer My God to Thee;" that men died like heroes and that wives refused to take safety at the price of separation from their husbands—these tensely dramatic details today thrill the world.

And there surges up through the horror of it a thought more terrible than all: IT NEED NOT HAVE HAPPENED! It was not necessary to break a speeding record; it was not necessary, therefore, to take the short and perilous northern route; it was not necessary, therefore, to plunge full speed into an ice-strewn sea of peril; it was not necessary that the crew should have lacked proper drilling for such an emergency, or that the ship should have lacked boats enough for all.

And but a single note of hope comes out of it all: that if the world does not forget too soon the lessons it has learned at such a cost, this thing may not happen again. And the precious lives now lost may then avail to save other lives in the future.

Forsyth, Mont., refused to give precedence in a news way Thursday by furnishing an old-time lynching bee. The old vigilante spirit has not entirely been civilized out of the Treasure State.

THE HOSPITAL FARM.

Charles E. Adams, counsel for the county board, has made it clear that the board cannot proceed to spend money on a hospital or penal farm until it receives legislative authorization to do so.

As indicated by The Herald when it was first reported that the law now makes no authorization of such expenditures, the time that must elapse before actual work can begin need not be wasted.

A thing that is so well worth doing as this project is well worth doing rightly; and the county board, the Duluth public welfare commission and interested citizens will find that it will take much of the time that must elapse before the legislature can act to outline in detail the plans for the work. A site must be selected and an option secured. The plans for necessary buildings must be arranged for. It must be determined what employment shall be given the inmates, for it is clear that agricultural pursuits alone will not be sufficient.

Whether the plan should be to keep the inmates busy clearing land, moving from one tract to another as fast as the first is cleared and ready for sale to market gardeners, or whether some manufacturing industry shall be established at the farm to insure steady employment the year around, is a question that should be studied carefully and decided rightly before any other action is taken.

There will, probably, be no difficulty whatever in getting the necessary authority from the legislature early in the session which begins Jan. 6.

The discussion has developed the fact that about everybody, including most of the members of the county board, is in favor of the hospital farm project; and that has made it worth while.

And congress saw in the Titanic disaster a chance for another investigation.

A VACATION SAVINGS FUND.

Not long ago The Herald outlined a plan for an office, store or shop co-operative savings and loan club which has worked successfully in many places.

A story in "Business" describes another interesting adaptation of this scheme, this time to provide vacation money.

It was discovered in an insurance office where between two and three hundred persons were employed, and where regular vacations were granted, that hardly any of the employes were able to save money enough to make any good use of their vacations.

A head stenographer, who found that her subordinates, though they earned eight to fifteen dollars a week, hardly ever had any money when vacation time came, proposed that they start in and save fifty cents a week for vacation funds. A few of them did for awhile, but something came up that called for money, and presently all these vacation funds were spent.

So the head stenographer took it up with a head officer of the company, and a new scheme was put in operation.

From the president to the office boys every one is invited—though not compelled—to save fifty cents a week. Those who desire may make it higher, up to two dollars, which is the limit. Dues are paid in every pay day between noon and 2 p. m. Those who fail to pay at the specified time are dropped, and forfeit what they have paid in.

This insures the continuity of the plan. Those who couldn't possibly save even fifty cents a week if they had charge of their savings, will keep on saving when the penalty if they fail is the loss of all they have deposited.

As each member leaves for his vacation the amount of his savings is paid over to him. The fund is started anew each October, and the interest paid by the bank in January is divided pro rata among the members.

This, too, is a good scheme to try in any office, store or shop.

Teddy and the others are spending the day cornhusking.

THROUGH ALL THE AGES.

I don't see why we need bother about this commission plan of government. We've got along pretty comfortably with the old charter, and just because other cities are trying something new is no reason why we should change.—A citizen of Duluth.

"My dear," said Mrs. Troglodyte as she entered the cave after a visit to distant relatives, "do you know that they have invented a new kind of home that they build out of pieces of trees instead of digging a hole in a bank: Some people where I have been have one of those new houses, and they are mighty stuck up about it."

"So?" grunted Mr. Troglodyte, as he continued at his occupation of sharpening a stone arrow.

"Yes," continued Mrs. Troglodyte. "They cut the pieces of trees into proper shape, fill the cracks with moss, build up a fireplace out of stone that runs out through the roof and lets the smoke escape instead of filling the inside as ours does, and put in square holes they call windows and other larger ones they call doors. It is always dry and light and pleasant, and everybody says it is a great improvement on the old cave."

"So?" grunted Mr. Troglodyte, squinting, in the dim light, at the piece of stone he was shaping, but not displaying much interest in his helpmeet's report.

"Yes, so!" responded his wife with some asperity. She was weary and footsore from her long journey, but her husband's indifference aroused her, and she continued with spirit: "Everybody there is working on new houses—that's what they call them, and they say that in a year there won't be a family left living in a cave except those shiftless Hardshells."

"Uh, huh," replied Mr. Troglodyte.

"Well," said Mrs. T., quite sharply, "of course you'll get busy and build a house?"

"Nope." said Mr. T. amiably but firmly.

"Why not?" More sharply.

"Well, I guess the old cave is good enough for us. It was good enough for our fathers and mothers and their fathers and mothers, and glad enough they were to get a good, warm, dry cave to live in. If it's damp, we can always go out and kill some beasts and get some skins to sit on. If the fire fills it with smoke, we can go out doors and get some fresh air. You come back from your trip with these newfangled notions, and expect me to fall right in with them. You're going to get fooled. We've got along pretty comfortably with the old cave, and just because some other people are trying something new is no reason why we should change."

"You're a pretty thing!" said Mrs. T. angrily. "I don't wonder people call you a cave-dweller. You're well named."

The Carpathia docked just six years to a day after the San Francisco disaster.

THE STATE TREASURER IS RIGHT.

State Treasurer Walter J. Smith is urging that Minnesota sell its three per cent Virginia bonds and put the money at the disposal of Minnesota communities which need to borrow money for improvements. This would increase the state's revenue a third, and reduce the interest paid by communities from five and five and a half per cent to four. Treasurer Smith is right.

Oh, yes—what has become of Sidna Allen?

THE COST OF WAR.

It costs the world more than two billions and a quarter of dollars annually to keep prepared for war.

If the world spent ten per cent of that in paving the way for world peace, the blessings and benefits to humanity in every year after the dream of world peace is realized would be worth incalculably more than the present cost of preparedness for war.

In a World Peace Foundation pamphlet Arthur W. Allen gives some illuminating figures. Taking the last obtainable annual reports, he finds the world's annual armament bill to be $2,263,332,000. The five leaders spend the following amounts annually: Great Britain, $341,820,000; Russia, $319,770,000; Germany, $318,446,000; United States, $283,086,000; France, $270,918,000.

The world's annual cost of armament would build nearly half a million public schools at $5,000 each.

It would pay the wages at $500 each—which is far above the world's average wage—of more than four and a half million toilers.

And this annual cost is only the beginning of the actual cost. Every soldier and sailor is a potential producer in the years of his greatest productive possibilities. The world loses all that. Every dollar that is put into forts or battleships or guns or ammunition is taken away from some needed thing that would be of vast benefit to humanity. The world losses all that.

And on top of these losses the world has to tax itself for this annual charge of two billions and a quarter!

This expense is increasing, not decreasing. In twenty years the annual military expenditures of seven nations —Russia, Germany, France, the United States, Great Britain, Italy and Austria-Hungary—more than doubled, increasing from $511,110,000 to $1,112,915,000.

And to what end? What good comes of it all? With millions the world over on the verge of starvation or over it all the time, this gigantic waste of money squeezed from the hard-earned wages of the workers of the world is a tremendous crime without any compensating benefit.

Milwaukee managed to get on the map in the middle of it all, but she had to have an April snowstorm to do it.

The striking feature about all these Republican charges of fraud is that you can always tell by the returns from an election or convention, just which side is going to be the next to make a holler.

President Taft says he thinks a message pointing out the need of stricter maritime laws is unnecessary. The president shows his good judgment. He could not write a message that would be as effective as those stories of the survivors of the Titanic.

THE OPEN COURT

(Readers of The Herald are invited to make free use of this column to express their ideas about the topics of general interest, but discussions of sectarian religious differences are barred. Letters should not exceed 300 words—the shorter the better. They must be written on one side of the paper only, and they must be accompanied in every case by the name and address of the writer, though these need not be published. A signed letter is always more effective, however.)

INSPECTORS WHO DO NOT INSPECT.

To the Editor of The Herald:

In the midst of the sorrow of multiplied thousands of our people over the loss of 1,000 lives in the Titanic catastrophe we are brazenly insulted by the unmatched effrontery of a small fry official who seems to conclude that the American people are hopeless idiots.

Not long ago a tired and sad mother showed me the picture of a bonnie lad of 9 and told me that "he got burned to death on a Sunday school excursion. There were no lifeboats or lifebelts on the boat and almost all the children had to jump into the water and get drowned or stay on the boat and get burned to death. I lost my little boy just because owners of the Gen. Slocum wanted to save the price of a few cheap boats and lifebelts. Nearly 1,000 poor helpless children got burned or drowned and every one knew that the steamboat inspectors really murdered all those little children. By not seeing that the owners of the boat kept everything safe they let my little boy get killed."

In face of these terrible facts, George Uhler, supervisor inspector of the United States steamboat inspection service has the unparalleled nerve to say:

"If the Titanic had been registered in the United States she would have been forced to carry forty-eight lifeboats instead of the twenty she had under the British regulations. What is needed is legislation that will prohibit foreign vessels carrying passengers to or from American ports unless they are under inspection by United States authorities."

Was not the Slocum registered here? Indeed she was. And if the "inspection" by his inspectors was like in the case of the Slocum there would have been no one saved at all had the Titanic been registered here. It was fortunate for those saved that the boat was registered in England where the officers of the law have enough respect for it to enforce the law. This appalling slaughter has once again focused public attention on the dollar-madness that disregards human life. A few more dollars for dividends —and 1,000 precious lives have paid the ghastly forfeit. To save a few paltry dollars that fire escapes would cost—150 girls were roasted in the Triangle factory. And you swore a great oath—at the inspector again. They are not to blame. They dare not inspect. They would lose their jobs.

GUY WILLIAMS.

Duluth, April 18.

Planting the Vegetable Garden.

Farm and Home: It is not always advantageous to plant the garden as early as possible. Under certain conditions nature hastens the growth of late planted seeds so that the difference in time of their ripening will not accord with the difference in plantings. This is particularly the case when the season is late and rainy.

Plant for a succession of the different vegetables. A garden in which most of the planting is done at about the same time will not give as good results as where a period of time elapses between the second, third or fourth plantings of the same vegetables. Particularly is this true of peas. Where a number of different varieties were tried the best results are obtained from one or two varieties planted in succession.

In sweet corn, however, this was not so apparent. It was found best to plant several varieties as well as successive plantings. If the season was backward or the plantings made unusually early, sweet corn seemed to be slow in growth. On the other hand, the corn planted later would grow very fast under favorable conditions and almost catch up with the first plantings. To overcome this difficulty it was found advisable to rely on the plantings of different varieties.

Household Infelicities.

Chicago Journal: "There you go again, wearing my cuff links. What business have women got wearin' cuffs, anyhow? I have to tie mine together with twine half the time."

"Oh, you're the bright little husband, all right. We're the only family in this block that hasn't got an automobile."

"Yes, my envelope is 10 cents short this week. I know it. Come now, excuse me of leading a double life."

"Who in blue blazes took all of them quinene capsules? I can buy 'em by the gross and never find one when I want it."

"No, of course, you ain't got a thing to wear. No woman ever had. I'd advise you to stay in the house if you haven't, for you are liable to be pinched."

His Day in Court.

Kansas City Star: A newspaper man who had occasion to visit a courtroom recently became interested in the examination of a witness which was in progress in a certain trial. Here is a part of what he heard:

Lawyer for the plaintiff—Now, Mr. Smith, will you please tell the jury if you ever saw this land?
Answer—Yes, sir.
Question—Yes, sir?
Answer—Yes, sir.
Question—How many times did you go to look at this land?
Answer—Twice.
Question—Twice?
Answer—Twice.
Question—Who went with you?
Answer—Abe Martin.
Question—Abe Martin?
Answer—Abe Martin.
Question—Hold on a minute. Was that the first time or the second time? You said you went two times, did you not?
Answer—Yes, sir.
Question—Two times?
Answer—Two times.
Question—Well, did Abe Martin go with you the first time or the second time?
Answer—The first time.
Question—The first time?
Answer—The first time.
Question—And who went with you the second time?
Answer—Abe Martin.
Question—Abe Martin?
Answer—Abe Martin.
Question—Then Abe Martin went with you both times?
Answer—Both times.
Question—Who else went with you the first time?
Answer—No one.
Question—No one?
Answer—No one.

The newspaper man had overstayed the limit of his time. Still he lingered. He had become interested. He wanted to know why Mr. Smith and Abe Martin went to look at the land and what they did when they got there, and if the land was worth seeing.

Question—O, by the way, Mr. Smith, you said you went in a buggy?
Answer—In a buggy.
Question—One horse?
Answer—Two horses.
Question—Two?
Answer—Two.
Question—Both times?
Answer—Both times.

The newspaper man left in despair. His time was more than up. But as he went down the stairs keeping step with the questions and answers as they ran in couplets through his mind, "Both times?" "Both times," he caught these words as they followed him down the steps to the floor below:

Question—And Abe Martin was with you?
Answer—He was.
Question—He was?
Answer—He was.

An hour's patient attention had elicited the full information that Mr. Smith and Abe Martin went to the country, twice, in a buggy, to look at some land. They did? They did.

And yet there are those who are so unreasonable as to insist that there might be an improvement in court procedure.

THE GOVERNORSHIP.

An Extravagant Administration.

Bemidji Pioneer: In this issue, the Pioneer publishes some statistics about the cost of the state government gathered by Chester A. Congdon of Duluth. As a rule, statistics are dry reading but there is real life in what Mr. Congdon has written. The questions that he asks are pertinent and if Eberhart and his slate are to go before the people again next fall, they must make some explanation before they can hope for any consideration.

Governor Eberhart did not state from what point he obtained his figures. Mr. Congdon received his from the state tax commission, an impartial body and one noted for its fair work. Mismanagement hits the pocketbook and every reader should study Mr. Congdon's letter and remember its facts through the coming campaign. It may also explain in a measure why so many emigrants pass through Minnesota instead of stopping to cultivate our own rich lands.

Remedy—Change Governors.

Aurora News: Governor Osborn has called two sessions of the Michigan legislature to pass a presidential primary law. Governor Eberhart has not called any sessions, as yet, and the people of Minnesota want re-apportionment, presidential primaries, just railway taxation and—but what's the use?

Throwing Down Frank.

Sauk Center Herald: The state administration makes a noise like throwing down one of the war horses of the Republican party, a man who has served in congress with honor to himself and to the state, a man whom every citizen of Sauk Center honors and respects, the Hon. Frank M. Eddy. Mr. Eddy has been one of the influential leaders of the Republican party for years and was known in national circles long before the present small-bore incumbent of the gubernatorial chair was out of knickerbockers. And yet, puffed up like a toad with his own importance, little Adolph gives the icy hand and the marble heart to a faithful servant of the party and the state. Comment is unnecessary.

"Dreams Go By Contraries."

Minnesota Mascot: It is said that Governor Eberhart will recommend a gubernatorial preference primary—we dreamt this last night.

If.

Dawson Sentinel: Dad Tuttle of the Belview Independent says that Governor Eberhart has declared himself unequivocally in favor of fine weather, good crops and consolidated schools and that "Taft for president" will make a fourth plank for his platform. With such a platform and a certificate of 100 per cent deportment signed by 333 citizens of Mankato, (none of whom is listed in Who's Who) our perambulating governor will be re-elected—if luck and the brewery barrel are not too soon exhausted.

Ringdal.

Frazee Free Press (Rep): We learn that P. M. Ringdal of Crookston is being strongly urged as a candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Ringdal is a clean man, has an admirable record and if the state should again be necessarily turned over to the Democrats we know of no one we would rather see elected as Democratic governor.

And Some Smell.

Plummer Pioneer: Eberhart refuses to talk about his campaign this year. He will leave it to his record to talk for him. Some more silence.

A Free Man and Good.

Little Falls Herald: John Jenswold of Duluth is again receiving much mention as a Democratic candidate for governor. Minnesota could not hope for better fortune than to have so sturdy and able a believer in popular rights in the executive chair. Although a resident of Duluth, he has never been the follower and beneficiary of the Steel trust. He is a free man and a good man.

Champ Clark's Backer.

Springfield Republican: Speaker Champ Clark's chief backer for the Democratic presidential nomination is William R. Hearst.

Now this fact provokes reflection on the curious changes in American politics that are brought about in a very short time.

Speaker Clark always made a fetish of party regularity; he was also an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Bryan in his three campaigns.

Except when he was himself the candidate, Mr. Hearst, on the other hand, has scarcely supported a Democratic ticket, state or national, in a decade.

For years with his Independence league he fought the Democratic party and helped elect Republican governors and presidents. In 1908, he was substantially in alliance with Mr. Roosevelt and his services in electing Mr. Taft over Mr. Bryan were too notable to be soon forgotten.

Now that Mr. Hearst has returned to the Democratic party, his choice of Speaker Clark as his presidential candidate makes conspicuous two things, first, his own purpose to be, if possible, the power behind the throne in the next administration in case a Democrat is elected president; second, the doubtful qualifications of Speaker Clark to be the next Democratic candidate for president, much less to be the president of the United States.

It would be most singular if the Democratic party should now permit a man like Hearst to name its candidate, shape its policies and mold its destiny.

In a Puddle.

Harper's Magazine: A New Yorker who put up at a country hotel in the Middle West was much impressed by the deft skill of a brisk waitress, who attended him. At breakfast she waved a glass pitcher above some steaming hot buckwheat cakes that she had just placed before him.

"Syrup?"

"Please."

"How will you have it—round an' round or in a puddle?"

"Pardon me, but I don't——"

"Round an' round, or in a puddle?"

"In a—in a—puddle, I think."

Whereupon the golden stream began its sticky descent to the center of the cakes. As she poured, the waitress' eyes embraced the New Yrker in a contemplated glance.

"Some prefers it round an' round," she explained, "but I likes it best in a puddle."

An Unexpected Testimonial.

Tit-Bits: Little Bilderson prided himself upon his good appetite and his capacity for amusing. He was dining with a friend a few nights ago, and did his best to keep his host and hostess with their 6-year-old daughter amused, and at the same time managed to do ample justice to the good things provided.

"Oh, dear, Mr. Bilderson," remarked the little one, after the guest's wittiest sally, "I wish you'd come here to dinner every day."

Bilderson positively beamed satisfaction.

"Do you, dear?" he smiled. "Why?"

"'Cause," came the reply, as the observant maiden glanced around the table, "'cause there wouldn't be anything cold to eat the next day."

I Shall Be Worthy.

I may not reach the heights I seek;
My untried strength may fail me:
Or, halfway up the mountain peak,
Fierce tempests may assail me.
But though my goal I never see,
This thought shall always dwell with me—
I will be worthy of it.

I may not triumph in success,
Despite my earnest labor;
I may not grasp results that bless
The efforts of my neighbor.
But though life's dearest joy I miss,
There lies a nameless strength in this—
I will be worthy of it.

Mayor d'Autremont sent a veto to the council last night upon the resolution instructing Captain Miller to oppose any appropriation for harbor work beyond Grassy Point. A DREAM OF RICHES SHATTERED.

Richard Rice, jr., in the Atlantic Monthly: It came in a perfectly plain, unpretentious envelope from Portland, Me. The heading was, "The Latin-American Peanut company."

I always know these things instinctively, and as I read these first fine words, "The Latin-American Peanut company, operating the Bongo River plantations in Yucatan," with every syllable my enthusiasm rose. The romance of the thing!

"Capital, so and so,"—these little details are always unimportant. "Directors, so and so"—mysterious and alluring as figures at a masked ball. "Come in now before we go up!"—this in red ink, rather ominous. "One dollar makes you a shareholder. One hundred shares purchased now may mean a fortune within a year. Have you considered that peanuts are a great American food? Name another grocery as common! Common, but not commonplace! (Read 'The Romance of the Peanut,' sent free to every subscriber of one share of our stock.) Remember! No climate for peanuts like Yucatan—no climate in Yucatan like the Bongo Basin—we own the Bongo—all we need is development!"

Is not the art of advertising the great American art? Does this not itself show that we are really more interested in mind than in matter, if we only knew it? Like a good American, then I was about to tear off the coupon and invest —$1—when my wife came in.

"Here is the milk bill," she said "its $8."

"Wait!" I cried. "We are about to make our fortune, we can pay it then. Listen to this."

My wife listened, and as usual at once proceeded to moralize the matter.

Of course, she concluded, if I only wanted to invest in a little financial dissipation, there was certainly as small a chance here as anywhere of getting anything else back; but the baby had to have milk, 15-cent milk.

"Let him be brought up on peanuts!" I cried beginning to fill out the yellow blank. "You always miss the point, who wants anything back? Isn't it enough to be operating on the Bongo? Isn't is more than enough to have such a circular to read aloud every morning before breakfast, like a collect for eternal hope?

"Ah, gracious peanuts! National food! What whiffs of memory you bring! The pathos of the street corner, the glamour of the grandstand!

"And besides all the practical inducements," continued, "listen to this: 'We invite all original holders to five hundred shares of our stock to make the voyage from New Orleans to Bongo as our guests, in the new steamship-yacht Filopena, to inspect for themselves these promising peanut plantations.'"

The alliteration here seemed to me so fine that I looked up for applause. My wife held out the milk bill.

"The man it waiting," she said.

Roosevelt's Good Work.

New York World: Mr. Roosevelt is beaten for the nomination for president, but The World hopes that he will continue his campaign until the national convention meets, as the Illinois result will dispose him to.

His nomination for president would be a great calamity, but his campaign for the nomination is a great public benefit.

He is shaking up the dry bones of fossilized respectability.

He is scaring the republican party out of its smug self-complacency.

He is driving it down the road of political progress in spite of itself, and the further he drives it the better.

The republican party can no longer stand pat. It is obliged to move with the procession and "pander to the moral sentiment of the community," as Fernando Wood used to say.

The Rochester convention furnishes only one illustration out of many of the excellent results of Mr. Roosevelt's dash for the white house.

It is a far more representative convention than would have been held had not Mr. Roosevelt tried to seize a third term.

It is a far more representative convention than would have been held had not Mr. Roosevelt tried to seize a third term.

It is a far more progrssive convention. It will come closer to meeting the real issues of American politics.

It is thinking much more about the American people and much less about the Wall street contributors to the campaign fund than it would have done had not Mr. Roosevelt's candidacy threatened the country with political disaster.

Master and Man.

NEWS ITEM—Mr. Bruce Ismay's name appears among those of the "women and children saved." Mr. Ismay is one of the owners of the White Star Line.

The Captain stood where a Captain should,
For the Law of the Sea is grim;
The Owner romped ere his ship was swamped
And no Law bothered him.

The Captain stood where the Captain should,
When a Captain's boat goes down;
But the Owner led when the women fled,
For an Owner must not drown.

The Captain sank as a man of Rank,
While his Owner turned away;
The Captain's grave was his bridge and, brave,
He earned his seaman's pay.

To hold your place in the ghastly face
Of Death on the Sea at Night,
Is a Seaman's job, but to flee with the mob
Is an Owner's noble Right.
B. Hacht in Chicago Journal.

At Least He Hesitated.

Saturday Evening Post: A group of St. Louis men were discussing a banker in that city who has the reputation of hard bargaining close-fistedness, and who invariably gets his pound of flesh.

"Oh, well," said a man present who hadn't taken part in the general hammerfest, "he isn't so bad. I went in to see him the other day to get a loan of $10,000 and he treated me very courteously."

"Did he lend you the money?"

"No, he didn't lend it to me; but he hesitated before he refused."

Luck.

He never walked beneath a ladder,
nor saw a pin and let it lie;
He never started things on Friday, nor let a good luck charm get by;
He never let a hunchback pass him ere he had somehow touched his hump,
But once his collarbone was broken against the handle of a pump.

He had a list of all the jinxes; the moon when new was never seen.
By him, except o'er his right shoulder
he would not be one of thirteen;
He carried luck stones in his pockets;
he thought the opal was accurst;
And every morning he selected his right shoe to put on first.

He often went to fortune tellers to find out how and when to act;
He turned away from cross-eyed people, he thought they brought him bad luck, in fact;
He picked up horseshoes when he found them, but never nailed one o'er his door—
He had no door to nail one over,
Enough is said, so why say more?

Hail, Ragtime!

Life: Ragtime has come to its own and American connoisseurs no longer need shake their heads disparagingly at this peculiarly American product. Vilmos Westony, Hungarian pianist, described as the "only living pupil of Wagner," says he loves our "American ragtime because of the opportunity it affords the real artists."

How's that?

And it is those who pose as "real artists" who have been pooh-poohing it.

"The dash and vim of it," says Mr. Westony, "is in the American blood and no European composer can ever hope to compose such music."

We confess that we have felt this way ourselves for a long time, but never before have we dared to express it publicly.

The Amateur Gardener.

It was the busy hour of 4
When from a city hardware store
Emerged a gentleman who bore
1 hoe
1 spade
1 large rake.

From there our hero promptly went
Into a seed establishment
And for these things his money spent:
1 peck of bulbs,
1 lot of assorted shrubs,
1 quart of vegetable seeds.

He has a garden under way
And if he's fairly lucky, say,
He'll have about the last of May
1 tomato vine,
1 egg plant,
1 radish.

CALL FOR STATE LABOR MEETING

Annual Convention Will Be Held in Brainerd in June.

The call for the annual convention of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor was issued this week by Secretary-Treasurer W. E. McEwen.

The convention will be held at Brainerd, Minn., and will be in session three days, beginning on June 17.

Every trade union in the state of Minnesota will have one delegate present for every twenty-five members in good standing. No union may have more than five delegates, however.

There are many important matters to come before the Brainerd meeting and it is looked forward to as the biggest meeting ever held by Minnesota union men.

IS THE COAL CORNERED?

Congressman Miller and Minnesota's Two Senators Will Investigate.

Senators Nelson and Clapp and Congressman C. B. Miller have replied favorably to the resolution recently passed by the city council calling for an investigation of the alleged coal combine at the Head of the Lakes. They state that they will give the matter their attention.

Congressman Miller says that he is pleased with the action of the council and that the matter is now pending in congress. His letter is as follows:

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 12th instant containing enclosure of copy of resolution passed by your city council. In this connection I beg to state that when there was brought to my attention the probability of a combination among coal dealers in reference to Two Harbors I introduced a resolution calling for investigation of the coal companies doing business at the Head of the Lakes.

"This resolution is now pending before the committee on interstate and foreign commerce. I have every reason to believe it will be favorably acted upon.

"Later it was thought by some other communities that a more extended investigation should be had and request therefor made. Such request has been embodied in another resolution. I think it can be said safely that as a result therefrom a thorough investigation will be made to determine whether a combination does exist in restraint of trade which keeps the prices of coal up to the consumer.

"I am very glad to see the common council take this action as it will be of material aid to me in the work now in progress."

TRIPLETS ARE BORN NEAR PINE RIVER.

Pine River, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—To Mr. and Mrs. John Grover, Jr., residing three miles northeast of here belongs the honor of being the parents of the first triplets born in Cass county, two girls and one boy having arrived at their home in the early hours of Tuesday. Two are alive and healthy but one of the little girls succumbed after living only a few hours. Mrs. Grover is a very slightly built woman, weighing only 120 pounds.

JURY UNABLE TO REACH AGREEMENT.

After having been out for more than twenty-four hours the jury in the case of John Makkila against the Duluth & Iron Range Railroad company was unable to reach an agreement and was discharged by Judge Ensign of the district court at 5 o'clock last evening.

The case was the last of the civil actions to be tried at the March term of court before a jury and had been on trial in Judge Ensign's room since April 7. The suit is one of the White Iron Lake fire cases, in which Makkila, a farmer, is suing to recover $4,500 damages to his property.

Upon the Proposed Wisconsin Water Power Measure.

Madison, Wis., April 19. — Representatives of the water power interests, the joint committee on water powers and conservation of the legislature, and the governor and the state's attorneys, have agreed upon a compromise on the water power bill.

By the compromise, municipalities desiring water power may acquire them by condemnation through the regular legal channels. By the original bill, compensation was to be fixed by the state railroad commission.

By the second compromise, dam franchises may be repealed by the legislature for cause only and upon advice or recommendation of the rate commission after an investigation by that body.

POTATOES ARE LOWER

Onions and Cabbages Are Scarce and High—Tomatoes Are Cheaper.

New Beets and Carrots Arriving—Strawberries More Plentiful.

The most interesting development that has taken place on the local produce markets since a week ago is the decline in the price of potatoes. These have for some time been bringing the extraordinary high price of $1.15 a bushel, but are now selling for $1, at wholesale. The drying up of country roads, enabling farmers to do more hauling of their last year's potatoes to the market, seems to be about the only cause that can be assigned for this. Local produce dealers are not at all confident of the price going lower or even staying as low as $1. There is a great shortage of potatoes in the South and it would not occasion a great deal of surprise if the price should take a bullish turn and go higher than it has been at any time this spring.

Onions are still very scarce. The Texas onions, which have been expected so long, are not yet here. The lateness of these onions and the fact that the stocks of old American onions and Spanish onions are running very low, has put up the price of these onions. Spanish onions, which a week ago were bringing $2.25 a crate at wholesale, are now bringing $2.50 a crate.

There is an active demand for onion sets on the part of farmers and gardeners in the vicinity of Duluth. They are going out faster than they did last spring. There are more farmers and gardeners in the neighborhood of this city than there used to be. The scarcity and high price of onions has without doubt had a great deal to do with the big demand for the onion sets.

Cabbages are very scarce and high. The best that are on the Duluth market now are the ones from California, but these are not enough to supply the demand. There is an active sale of cabbages notwithstanding the high price. Considerable quantities are being brought from Louisiana. The Louisiana cabbages are inferior in quality to the Californias, but all of both that arrive here are readily sold. Cabbages on the Duluth market are higher now than they have been at any time during the last three or four years.

As the spring advances, the Southern vegetables are becoming more plentiful and cheaper. Florida tomatoes are now coming by the car load. A six-basket crate, which a week ago brought $5 at wholesale, now goes for $4. Duluth and the country towns that are commercially tributary to it consume about a car a week. With favorable weather, the tomatoes will soon be much cheaper, and it is expected that in two weeks the Duluth receipts will increase to two cars a week. Egg plants, shallotts, California rhubarb, California asparagus and Florida new potatoes are all considerably cheaper than they were a week ago.

New beets and new carrots are now arriving from Louisiana. The former are bringing 60 cents a dozen bunches and the latter 80 cents.

Louisiana strawberries are considerably cheaper than they were a week ago, but not so cheap as they were two or three days ago. Early in the week the wholesale price went as low as $2.25 a case. There have been heavy rain storms down in Louisiana. These will affect the receipts for a few days. The quality of the berries may not fully recover for about a week. The strawberries are not brought as freight, for this is too slow. They are shipped in refrigerator cars, attached to passenger trains. The fact that the express rates have to be paid for their transportation makes them considerably higher, but the quality is preserved.

Oranges are still at the height of the season. They are sweeter and juicier now than at any other time of the year. Those on the Duluth market now are the California navels.

There is very little grape fruit left. Florida has not much to send. Some may come later from California, but not a great deal of it will be placed on the Duluth market, for it is far inferior in quality to that grown in Florida.

The market is firm on good apples. There is still an active demand for them. There is no apparent danger of the available supplies giving out.

The prices of poultry are firm. Very little poultry is now being brought to the markets by the farmers. The cold storage supplies of fowls are running rather low.

Eggs are a shade higher than they were a week ago, the wholesale price being 20 to 21 cents, whereas a week ago it was 20 cents. Packing houses in the East are beginning to buy up eggs and put them away, although the price is pretty high for packing. The packing is very late this year, as most packers have been waiting for the eggs to get cheaper. At this time a year ago there were about 300,000 cases of eggs in American storage houses for winter consumption. Now, it is not thought that more than 5,000 cases have been put away in this entire country. There are thirty dozen eggs to a case. A year ago it cost 16¼ cents a dozen to buy eggs and get them packed. Now it costs 22 cents a dozen. If eggs are to be packed and stored at this price, they will have to be very high indeed next fall and winter to enable packers to get their money back and make their usual profits.

Butter is a little cheaper, the best creamery now bringing 32 cents a pound in prints, whereas a week ago it brought 34 cents a pound. The recent high prices caused the demand for butter to fall off enormously. There was a large consumption of substitutes. The stocks of butter consequently began to accumulate and the prices had to come down.

Cheese has taken quite a drop, most grades being about 2 cents a pound lower than they were a week ago. Cheese factories have been starting up in many parts of the country, as is the custom in the spring. Few do any cheese making in the winter. It is cheaper to make the cheese in spring, summer and early fall, and store it for the winter trade. It is becoming pretty hard now to buy any but fresh cheese. The old cheese is more popular, having finer flavor.

TIME, THE ESSENCE

If you have kidney trouble the serious question is not the kind, but how long you have had it. It is declared incurable after the sixth month no matter whether a test shows albumen (Bright's) or not. Some of the most fatal cases do not show albumen. If the kidney trouble is of over six months' standing, there is only one preparation that can be taken with any degree of confidence, only one that is getting recoveries in chronic cases and that is Fulton's Renal Compound.

The Compounders (address on the bottle) desire to hear from and advise with every patient not getting results.

WANTS DIVORCE ON GROUNDS OF CRUELTY.

Mrs. Augusta B. Stewart, aged 24, yesterday started suit for divorce from James Stewart, 33, on the grounds of cruelty. Stewart is stable foreman for the Rust-Parker-Martin wholesale house of this city.

They were married on Nov. 19, 1905, in this city and have three children, Myrtle Janet, aged 6; John Harold, 4; and Helen Marie, 2. In her complaint, she alleges that Stewart has mistreated her by striking, kicking and pinching her on several occasions, particularly when he was intoxicated.

She claims that he is an able-bodied man, capable of earning $85 a month, but says that his morals are bad and asks the court to grant her the custody of the children. The case will probably be tried at the May term.

THE EVENING STORY

How He Finally Spoke

By Lulu Judson Moody.

Old Billy ambled along the hot turnpike, bending beneath the burden of the basket on his arm. From under the snowy cloth with which it was covered there arose delectable odors in which roast turkey, home-cured ham, and apple tart commingled. Old Billy had prepared the basket himself. He had protested against the turkey, but when Mr. Joe said in tones of mild reproach, "Miss Jinny likes turkey, William," he had no more to say, for the pleasure and comfort of Miss Jinny were sacred alike to Old Billy and his master. Later, when the big bird was roasting in the oven, Mr. Joe added a note of warning: "Remember, William, Miss Jinny likes her turkey well done." And Old Billy had remembered conscientiously.

Now, however, he grumbled a little to himself, for the sun was hot and the basket heavy. "De spring of the yeah ain't no time fur turkey, nohow," he told himself as he had told Mr. Joe that morning. "But Miss Jinny likes it!"

The old man's stocky figure, mild countenance and timid manner, made up a curious replica of his master-in black. For fifteen years the two had lived together in mutual devotion, Old Billy serving Mr. Joe unceasingly and the latter leaning upon and taking comfort from the old negro's steady faithfulness. For fifteen years they had longed for Miss Jinny, mild-mannered and gentle-voiced as Mr. Joe himself, to be mistress of the old farmhouse. Old Billy knew, as did all the country round, and, indeed, Miss Jinny herself, that she would say yes if Mr. Joe would but speak the word. But for fifteen years he had hesitated lest the sweet serenity of their bautiful friendship be marred by her refusal. His was a modest soul.

Old Billy breathed laboriously as he plodded along in the sunshine, unconsciously slowing his pace as he approached a tree which threw a grateful shade across the road. An old log lay invitingly beneath. He glanced up at the sun. It was only noon high and he was not due to meet the plenickers at the Big Spring until 1 o'clock. He seated himself on the log and leaned his tired old back against the tree. The shade was very pleasant, myriads of insects sang their songs in the air, and Old Billy had risen early that morning. Soon he slept.

A woman from the mountains came walking down the road, her narrow skirts flapping about her lank limbs. She dragged her feet—clad in a worn pair of man's shoes—through the red dust of the road, making a cloud about her as she walked. An old brown calico dress covered her shapeless figure, and from the depths of her sunbonnet a pair of faded eyes in a lean and yellow face peered dully forth. Hard work, poor food and the isolation of her mountain home had left her more animal than human. She was on her way to town for "side" meat and cornmeal with which to feed her half dozen children, clamoring for food six miles back in the mountains in the two-room cabin they called home. On her arm she carried a basket, over one end of which a cloth was lightly laid.

She came steadily along until she reached the shade which sheltered the sleeping negro. Putting down her basket she removed her bonnet and fanned herself. The old man slept on undisturbed. She knew him—he was Mr. Joe's Old Billy. Everybody for miles round knew Mr. Joe, who owned the big peach orchard and the fine watermelon patch, and who sent away hundreds of crates of strawberries in season. One year she had been among the women to help pick the berries. Yes, she knew Mr. Joe's nigger, and she regarded him with a natural contempt similar to that she would have inspired in Old Billy had he opened his eyes and recognized her, as he would surely have done, as "one of them no-count mossbacks from behind the mountains."

She began to regard the old man's basket with interest. Once the soft, warm breeze brought her a subtle hint of its contents and she sniffed the air hungrily. She gazed fascinated, at the cloth so marvelously white. The basket was like her own, of the common kind, bought from the same little store in town nearby. Softly she drew a step nearer. Old Billy was far away in a small shanty where he ate sweet potatoes and possum at his old Mammy's table. Suddenly the woman stooped and lifted the cloth. A sparkle shone in her pale eyes as she saw the turkey, brown and luscious; the succulent ham, rosy and fragrant; the tart, flaky and crisp; the snowy bread, the golden butter, the little pots of shimmering jelly. Her hand trembled as she replaced the cloth and moved a step back.

And still Old Billy, unconsciously recreant to his trust, slept on undisturbed by the steady gaze of the mountain woman. His basket stood to her for delicacies untasted and almost undreamed of. In the poverty of her cabin home it would make a banquet far beyond imagination's wildest flights. It would feast for a week the hungry family meagerly fed on fat salt meat and "pone." Her eyes narrowed with a look of cunning. Carefully, with soft, slow movement she lifted Old Billy's basket and replaced it with her own, over which she lightly spread the white cloth. Then, taking his basket on her arm, she disappeared rapidly down the road.

On the greensward in the shade of the trees near the Big Spring Mr. Joe helped Miss Jinny to spread the snowy cloth. The children were shouting happily as they waded and splashed in the cool water of the Branch, while their elders talked cheerily among themselves, unpacking baskets, carrying water and making other preparations for the dinner. A gay mockingbird lit on a tree nearby and, looking straight at Mr. Joe and Miss Jinny, caroled a sweet love song. Mr. Joe's hand accidently touched hers as they spread the cloth, and her cheek turned a sudden youthful pink. Oh, he thought, if he only dared speak. Oh, if he but dared, echoed Miss Jinny's loving heart.

"I have a surprise for you," he whispered tenderly. Then he straightened himself and looked about. "Old Billy was to bring my basket. He is late."

"Here he comes now," some one called, and the old man was seen hurrying through the trees, while with an appeal for pardon his eyes sought Mr. Joe's.

"You are late," said the latter severely. "But never mind; give me the basket." He took it with a look of conscious pride and set it down. "There is something fine in here," he said, his face shining as he looked around with a delightful air of mystery. The others drew nearer, among them Miss Jinny, tremulous with anticipation. Dear Mr. Joe's basket was sure to be full of the most delicious delicacies. Old Billy still breathing heavily, mopped his brow but his heart was at rest. "Now," said Mr. Joe kindly, "we will see what good things Old Billy has brought us," and with a flourish he began to remove the cover. Suddenly he drew back bewildered, incredulous. What was this? Oh, no! Impossible! His eye must deceive him. He felt like a man in a dream as he stared at the basket and then at those about him.

"What is it?" they cried, crowding nearer. Down on his knees he went with trembling hands he lifted from the cozy depths of the basket not the turkey nor the ham nor any of the edibles he expected to find there, but a living, dimpled, rosy baby, fast asleep. For a moment the crowd stood breathless mith amazment. Then a shout went up. There was questions, exclamations and little gusts of laughter. "Where did it come from?" was the cry. A picture of helpless masculine bewilderment, Mr. Poe awkwardly holding the child, a healthy youngster a few months old, clad in a little cotton slip. Drops of water which might have been tears or perspiration rolled down his cheeks.

"William," he said sternly, "where did this child come from?" Old Billy had stood with bulging eyes since the uncovering of the basket. "Foh Gord, Mr. Joe," he gasped, "foh Gord, it were a turkey when I left home." Mr. Joe did not join in the shouts of laughter which followed. "This is a deserted child," he said solemnly.

"It is a fine child," one declared. "What will we do with it?" "Yes, what can he do with it?" echoed the others. Mr. Joe clutched the baby nervously. At this point the child awoke, opened a pair of bright blue eyes, yawned, stretched himself, and in so doing hit Mr. Joe on the cheek with a little dimpled fist. Mr. Joe felt a tightening of the muscles of his heart and a lump arose in his throat. Then with a sudden inspiration he raised his head and looked about him. His face was illumined.

"I intend to keep him," he said firmly. The babel grew louder. "But who will take care of him?" a voice protested. Mr. Joe's gaze wandered over the crowd. He had never held so young a child before and he did it badly. Mutely his eyes sought Miss Jinny's face and rested ther. There was a world of appeal in their honest depths, and right nobly the spirit of the little spinster answered to the call from his. She stepped couragously forth, her cheeks aflame and took the baby from his arms. "Poor little thing," she murmured. "Poor dear, little deserted baby." And Mr. Joe knew at last that his proposal had been accepted.

Get Up and Move

By CARA REESE.

If you stand there much longer you will take root. Oh, anywhere—at the ironing table, at the cook stove or on the street corner waiting for a trolley car.

If you stand there much longer you will take root. Oh, anywhere—looking in the storewindows, or in the reception line, receiving the guests, or watching the procession. Oh, anywhere—standing room only, or gaping where you have no business, or dazed and at a halt wondering what you should do next. You will take root if you do not move soon.

To take root is to become firmly fixed and established, to plant deep in one spot, to sink into the earth until shoots are put forth by your shoe leather and hold you fast. Then follow binding agencies, away ahead of the practises of the Chinese, and you are made acquainted with botanical terms, such as radical, fibril, soboles, bulb, tuber and rhyzoma. It is a hard, tight, fast proposition to allow yourself to take root.

You may not get away of your own accord, but only by some wild jerk from an outside source. Sometimes the word "vegetate" is used in describing the condition. If you stand too long in one place, or if you stay too long in one spot, you are bound to take root or to vegetate.

Some idea such as this must have occurred to the women folk suddenly some years since when they stampeded from ironing tables and such things, to women's clubs and business enterprises. They did not care to take root in kitchen or laundry, nor yet to take root with the broomstick as a staff to lean upon perpetually. It was a rather good move on the whole. The idea was and is to escape vegetation. One only needs to stand still for any length of time in order to find both feet and inclination too heavy to move. This is the beginning of a rooted, grounded condition.

It is all right for trees to take root and to stay in one place and flourish. It is all right for family trees to possess a sturdy trunk with undisputed possession of local habitation and a name, it is all right for business enterprises to be established and well fixed in community or state, but it is not altogether profitable for individuals to stand in one spot or another until the shoe soles sprout, and then to begin in some other loam patch and try the rooting process over again. Keep moving until you can afford to settle with a surety of permanence.

There is too much standing around these days and waiting for something to turn up. There is a hint of early spring fever in the veins and a corresponding languor and indolence. There is a hesitancy in making ventures. Be careful or before you know it you are striking root in habits and opinions which you do not care to own permanently. Jerk yourself from the mold.

DEVICE FOR PERFUMING

By FRANCES WILEY.

There are dainty perfumed sachets, filigree cases and pads to toss in dresser drawers and among miladi's belongings, so that whenever she moves she may be surrounded by an impalpable sweetness.

The newest addition to the perfuming paraphernalia is a device for making the air of her boudoir also sweet with her own particular sachet powder.

Perfume sprayed from an atomizer evaporates almost as soon as it touches the air, but this new method of perfuming a room is much more lasting In an exquisitely dainty jar of glass and silver is a thick wick, which fills the mouth of the jar.

Perfume is poured into the jar and the saturated wick is set alight, the alcohol, which is a part of all perfume, making a little blue flame. When this tiny lamp has been burning ten minutes the room any everything in it is sweet with violet, rose, valley lily or whatever odor miladi may fancy.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Worm-Eaten Furniture.

Banishing wood worm is rather a difficult task when once an article of furniture is badly affected with this pest.

Peroxide of hydrogen of the strength usually obtainable at the druggist's is the best medium for its extermination.

It should be injected thoroughly into all the worm holes by means of a very fine spray or machine oil can. Repeat the operation every other day for a fortnight, then dissolve a little beeswax, color it to the exact shade of the wood with aniline dye, and pass it into the holes with a flexible knife. Paraffine can be used in the same way, but its odor makes its use objectionable.

It must, also, not be applied in a room heated by means of an open fire or containing artificial light.

CALIFORNIA TREASURE STORY.

From the Los Angeles Herald: The story of a wound received in the Civil war which sealed the hiding place of a fortune for more than half a century and of a strange trick of fate which cleared the hider's memory in the evening of life was brought to Los Angeles by the hider's son, J. K. Anderson of New Orleans, who is at the Van Nuys en route to the old placer mining fields of California.

Anderson's father joined in the gold rush and was one of the miners of the '49 days. He located a claim in Placer county near Auburn and Newcastle. Within a year he had snatched from the river bottom a fortune. Then the call of the South for volunteers reached him. He buried the gold beneath the adobe blocks of a tavern in the vicinity of his claim, strapped all the precious substance he could carry about his body and hurried to join the Confederate army.

Anderson says that his father was struck in an engagement with the Union troops by a bullet which tore open his scalp and robbed him of his memory for fifty years. During that time, the son says, the parent was like a child with all knowledge of the hiding place of the gold gone. Before he died, a year ago, his memory of the gold rush returned to him and he was living again in the past that preceded his part in the conflict.

It was during these last moments that the old man told his son and the mother where he had buried what he claimed was a fortune. The son is hurrying to unearth if possible the buried treasure, Anderson said:

"My father said he buried the gold under a corner of an old adobe tavern patronized by the miners in the early days. This tavern was in Long valley at a point half way, I have learned, between the present towns of Newcastle and Auburn. I have learned through correspondence that a family by the name of Scott occupies the tavern as a farmhouse and that the country around it is devoted to the raising of citrus fruits.

"No one has disturbed the original lines of the building. The adobe blocks are heavy. I have obtained permission from the owners to prosecute my search and will give them a share of my findings. Otherwise I would have to buy the property."

Anderson is a civil engineer. He was engaged by the government for some time in work on the Panama canal, but has left his employment to search for the treasure which he maintains his father has hidden in the old placer mining fields of California.

SIAM'S AMAZON GUARD.

London Chronicle: Siam is one of the few countries which boast of a corps of women police. The members of this Amazon guard are all old and ugly. They wear uniform, though they are not armed. Their chief duty is to act as gatekeepers of the inner or women's palace at Bangkok.

They follow any stranger who enters the palace and remain with him until he takes his departure. They see that there is no mischief made and that no one makes love to the royal wives and concubines. Men who have business inside the palace—doctors, architects, carpenters, electric light fitters, etc.—enter the palace freely, but are always accompanied by some of the Amazon guard. The palace has some difficulty in recruiting these guards, as the work is hard and the pay poor, and the qualification—uncomplimentary.

INSURED HIS THUMB-NAIL.

Delaware Express: Charles Heinsey, a grainer employed in Newton, N. J., has taken out an accident insurance policy of $50 on the thumb nail of his right hand. He keeps the nail one and a half inches long and uses it almost entirely in his business of graining, as it works much better than an artificial grainer.

Several times the nail has been broken and each time he has lost money by being idle until it grew again. With a $50 insurance he won't feel the layoff so much.

CUTTING INTO OUR LUMBER

Canada Is Now Trying to Gobble Up the Australian Trade.

Two Colonies Are Working on a Big Trade Agreement.

Ottawa, Ont., April 19.—A report comes from Australia that the trade commissioners between Canada and Australia, who are now discussing the preliminaries preparatory to the conference of ministers which will take place later on, in regard to a preferential arrangement between the two big countries, have decided that there should be, to begin with, a duty placed on American lumber sufficiently high to reserve the market for lumber to Canadians and shut out, as far as possible, the American product. Many similar subjects under consideration will lessen the work of the representatives of the two governments when they meet later on to put the finishing touches to a trade agreement. Before any change can come into force, of course, both the Australian and Canadian parliaments will have to pass upon the same.

In reference to the proposed change in the lumber schedules it is pointed out that a duty of $2 per 1,000 against United States lumber entering Australia would throw the market to Canadian territory. It would, so it is said, divert from 60 to 65 per cent of the off-shore trade in timber now enjoyed by Oregon and Washington mills to British Columbia. Several large mills are now being constructed on the Fraser river and other points on the Canadian coast to take advantage of this new market. In addition to this there is growing trade for lumber in Alberta and Saskatchewan on account of the large influx of American and European immigrants to the Canadian West, and also to the revised, or better enforced regulations against imports of lumber from the United States. Add to this the high hopes of the British Columbia lumber mills when the Panama canal is opened, which is expected to add immensely to the trade in British Columbia, and the outlook for this industry is exceedingly good. Of course, a discrimination in canal rates by the United States on the Panama would spoil the trade by that route. When one country proceeds to discriminate against another, retaliation in one form or another is sure to follow. The trade history between Canada and the United States has not been without its lessons in this regard. And it should not be forgotten when this Pacific lumber business is under discussion that a great many of the men and much of the capital in its business in British Columbia are American.

New Railroad Commissioner.

A new member has been added to the railway commission in the person of M. Goodene, M. P. for Kootenay. The position has been vacant since the death of Thomas Greenway, at one time premier of Manitoba, and prior to his appointment a member of the dominion house. It is several years since the death of Mr. Greenway. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had an idea that the commission was large enough without adding to it and it is understood that he was committed to that view by the present chairman of the commission, Mr. Makee, who has not only done much good for the public in dealing with the railroads, but who has been the commission itself in a very large degree.

Everyone now agrees that the railway commission is an institution which has the warm support of every Canadian. In a recent address before the Montreal Commercial club, Mr. Graham, former minister of railways, declared that the control of Canadian railways through the board of railway commissioners was the most advanced system of railway control in the world. It was a policy of his when at the head of the department that not a penny of subsidy should be given to any Canadian line whether holding a provincial charter or not until it agreed to submit its rates and operations to the board of railway commissioners. Dealing with the construction of railways Mr. Graham said the difference between the construction of different railways was as different as that between different houses and that the cost depended altogether on the character of construction. He maintained that the only principle to pursue was to have a good standard of construction in the first instance.

The difference between a one per cent grade and a grade of four-tenths of one per cent often meant a difference of 100 per cent in cost. In Canada there was $56,000 a mile capitalization against railways, which might be considered high, but it was difficult to get a comparison with railways elsewhere because 75 per cent of the railways on the American continent had been under liquidation and it was almost impossible to discover their actual cost.

Whacking the Senate.

The Canadian senate is coming in for a good deal of discussion in the press nowadays, as the result of its amendments to the tariff commission and the highway bills, which resulted in their being held over for another year, not to speak of its defeating the Temiskaming railway subsidy amounting to about $2,000,000. Some of the government newspapers declare that the wings of the senate should be clipped as Lloyd George did to the house of lords, and others maintain that the chamber should be abolished. But the great bulk of them is willing to wait until such time, to use the language of Sir Richard Cartwright, as providence reforms the upper house. And this reform will not take very long, either, as there are already six vacancies for conservatice appointees and in a few years there will be a majority of the same complexion as the majority in the lower house. The senate representation for Manitoba and the western provinces can be increased considerably, and should this be done there might be a conservative majority in the upper chamber within five years. Both political parties have talked a great deal about reforming the senate, but just as soon as either gets into power the only reform that follows is that of appointing its own political friends whenever a vacancy occurs.

Revenue Grows.

Canada's revenue continues to grow at an amazing rate. The official returns just issued show that the revenue of the dominion for the year ending on March 31 last was $132,745,386, as compared with $114,666,225 for the previous fiscal year, or an increase of nearly $18,000,000. There was an increase in every department of the public service. The expenditure for the year on current account was $83,560,000, as compared with $75,590,000 in the previous year, an increase of about $8,000,000, while the expenditure on capital account was over $28,000,000, a decrease of about $1,500,000.

The figures for April show that there is no abatement in the returns as they come to hand, although it is to be expected that later on the British coal strike will have some effect upon Canadian trade statistics. On the other hand, the immigration arrivals are equal to past years. The Europeans coming to Canada so far this season are larger than for the same time last year and there is no decrease in those coming from the United States. This will help to swell the trade returns as the newcomers are all of the better class of agriculturists, bringing with them considerable effects and fairly well supplied with funds. Many Europeans, whose destination is the United States, are coming by way of Montreal and to deal with this class the United States authorities have officers located at Montreal so that there will be no inconveniences to the new arrivals or detentions of undesirables at the boundary line. The same class of work is done by the United States as is done by Canada at Boston.

INDICTMENTS FOR BAD ROADS

Threat of Judge May Stir Some Pennsylvania Officials.

Allentown, Pa., April 19.—The commissioners of Lehigh county, as well as a dozen boards of township supervisors and road masters, stand under a threat of indictment by Judge Frank M. Trexler of the criminal court. From every section the constables, in making their quarterly returns, reported roads in bad condition.

The flood of complaints was without precedent. The roads are bad, but not any worse than at this time in former years, but the people, who are gradually becoming educated on the good roads question, are complaining and are prodding the constables to register protests with the court.

In each instance the court instructed the district attorney to notify the supervisors to repair the roads immediately or run the risk of prosecution. Finally a report was made that the Cooperburg turnpike, which is the main automobile road between Philadelphia and Allentown, was also in bad shape.

"That's a county road," commented the judge. "Notify the county commissioners to repair it and if they neglect to do so, indict them also."

One of the boards of supervisors accused is that of North Whitehall township, for which District Attorney Rupp is attorney. In such a situation, however, his duties as district attorney are paramount.

HE BELIEVES POLECAT ODOR WILL CURE COLDS.

Columbus, Ind., April 19.—John Vorwald, a merchant here who has been buying furs for the last forty years, says he firmly believes his life has been prolonged because of inhaling the odor of skunk pelts.

"The odor of a skunk will positively cure a cold," he says, "and I believe it is beneficial to health in other ways. Why, Joseph I. Irwin, the banker, used to come down here and sit in my stretching room for hours at a time just to inhale the rare odor. He always said it helped him."

Mr. Vorwald says tho last season has been the best he has known for ten years. He says if he were a young man he would go into the fur business here exclusively and get rich at it. There will be fur for years to come, he thinks, and he is the best posted man on fur in this part of the state. The rarest skin offered him during the last season was that of a black 'coon.

Cats Have Mumps.

Winchester, Ind., April 19.—Cats and cogs are dying of mumps at Spartanburg, a village east of here. Two cats, one dog and a boy had the disease, and the animals died. The disease is an epidemic in this city, more than 400 cases having been reported during the winter.

TO SECURE PENSIONS FOR PRESBYTERIAN PARSONS.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 19.—Rev. Dr. J. Gray Bolton, pastor of Home Presbyterian church, has submitted to the Presbyterian Ministerial association a plan to provide pensions ranging from $500 to $1,200 a year for aged and disabled ministers. Dr. Bolton expects that it will receive the consideration of the general assembly when that body meets in Louisville next month.

Dr. Bolton's plan provides for an assessment upon both ministers and churches that will assure every retired Presbyterian minister a pension of not less than $500 per annum. He proposes that every presbytery shall make it incumbent upon its ministers and congregations that each minister shall pay an amount equal to one per cent of his salary and each congregation an amount equal to twice their minister's payment into this pension fund. In addition, voluntary subscriptions to the fund are to be solicited from wealthy Presbyterians.

RAISE HOGS ON A LARGE SCALE

Breeder Will Try What Can Be Done on the Ranges.

Jamison City, Pa., April 19.—The Pennsylania hills, are about to contribute another factor in the food supply of the country. Chestnut orcharding and apple raising have proven a success; now the business of raising hogs on a larger scale, using the wild lands as a range, is to begin. Henry W. Miller, who for many years has engaged in the hearding of cattle on the wild land ranges belonging to Col. Bruce Ricketts, will this summer, in connection with his cattle business, have charge of a drove of 50 hogs. This is but a starter, for it is expected that within three years the number of hogs kept on the range will number several hundred.

The entire drove of hogs to start with are to be Berkshires. It is calculated that, while these are not so large an animal as some of the other species, yet they are hardier and more apt to thrive on the mountain picking.

The hogs will be given the entire run of the ranges. It is not expected that they will always travel together; indeed, the one great trouble which Mr. Miller sees in the business is the likelihood of the hogs wandering away in groups and becoming wild.

In this event, when the rounding up time comes, the animals will have to be hunted and shot like bear, as in a single season some hogs when in environs removed from civilization become wild and ferocious.

The range on which the hogs are to be herded is a noted black bear country, and as bears have a natural appetite for young pork, it is not unlikely that some of the pigs will become food for bruin, unless the parent hogs are sufficiently pugnacious to drive off the marauders.

It is calculated that the natural increase from the fifty hogs turned upon the ranges this spring will yield several hundred shoats by fall, from which a choice will be made for the stocking next summer. The hogs will have to be rounded up and kept in shelter during the vigorous part of the winter. Every one of the animals will be branded before they are turned onto the range, and it will be the business of Mr. Miller, or one of his helpers to take a census of the droves at least once a month.

The grazing of cattle has been such a success with Mr. Miller that he has no doubt as to profit from the grazing of hogs. It may not be necessary to even grain the hogs, for the amount of feed obtainable, while not of the kind that will produce fat, will promote the growth of the animals and place them in condition for an early market on the hoof to those who will fatten them.

FAMILY IS REUNITED BY WRITING OF POEM.

Wilmington, Del., April 19.—A poem written by John F. Byers of York, Neb., published in a newspaper in Rome, N. Y., and read by a schoolgirl friend of his sister, Mrs. Mary Manchester of 218 West Twenty-ninth street, this city, has resulted in uniting a brother and sister who had been separated and who heard nothing from one another for fifteen years.

Byers formerly lived here with his sister, Mrs. Manchester, but in 1897 went West. A short time later his sister changed her address and letters from him to her were returned. She communicated with nearly every postmaster in the United States in her efforts to find Byers, but failed. His poem was read by a friend of Mrs. Manchester, who wrote to her and told her about the composition. Mrs. Manchester wrote to the newspaper, obtained her brother's address, and now they are preparing for a family reunion.

HOPE OF ADDITIONAL SURVIVORS IS LOST

Original Reports of the Disaster of the Titanic Are Magnified By the Facts.

New York, April 19.—The Titanic disaster as written into history today by many of the 745 survivors accounts for the loss of 1,589 persons at sea off the Newfoundland banks early Monday morning, and the subsequent death of six persons who had been rescued, bringing the total of lives lost to 1,595.

These official figures magnify estimates which had come by wireless, and the stories which survivors tell make certain, as had already been judged from the meager wireless reports, that the disaster is the greatest that ocean travel has ever known.

The big facts which came to the surface in the flood of narratives are that these hundreds met their death.

That there is hardly the shadow of a hope that the grand total will be curtailed by a single additional survivor.

That several men of wealth and world-wide prominence are, as had been feared for several days, among those who perished.

That practically the only women who were not saved were those who chose to die with their husbands.

That nearly all of the survivors saw the Titanic sink and heard the music of the orchestra playing "Nearer, My God, to Thee" mingling with the shrieks of the drowning as the vessel sank in 2,000 fathoms.

The Titanic struck an iceberg about ninety feet high, which ripped the liner's sides open and made water-tight compartments useless, and while the vessel was gradually sinking the icy water reached her steaming boilers, causing an explosion which sent her to the bottom.

Among the hundreds who perished were Col. John Jacob Astor and Maj. Archibald Butt, Benjamin Guggenheim, Jacques Futrelle, George D. Widener, Henry B. Harris and scores of other well known persons. Isidor Straus was among them also, with Mrs. Straus, who refused to leave her husband behind when she had the opportunity to save herself.

Maj. Butt, with an iron bar in his hand, is said to have stood at the steerage passage and defended the women and children from maddened men.

Col. Astor also is said to have met his fate bravely, after seeing his bride to a lifeboat, drawing aside to watch other women step to safety and awaiting his own fate.

It was only because the maximum capacity of the steamer's life boats was barely a third the complement of the ship, in crew and passengers, that hundreds of despairing passengers had to be left to their fate.

J. Bruce Ismay is said by some of the passengers to have been one of the first to get into the life boats, but this is denied by Mr. Ismay himself. Stunned by the immensity of the tragedy, he had little to say except that he had heard of the investigation which the United States senate had begun, and expressed his full willingness to assist the senate committee in its inquiry. He agreed to appear before the committee in this city today.

The surviving passengers are unanimous that the "unbelievable" happened. The voyage had been pleasant and uneventful. The Titanic had been making good time and all accounts agree that on the night of the disaster she was apparently going at her usual rate of from 21 to 25 knots an hour.

Quartermaster Moody, who was at the helm, said that the ship was making 21 knots and that the officers were under orders at the time to keep up speed in the hope of making record passage.

Obeyed Speed Order.

These orders were being carried out in the face of knowledge that the steamer was in the vicinity of great icebergs sweeping down from the North. That every afternoon according to the recording of the hydrographic office, the Titanic had relayed a short wireless warning from the steamer Amerika that an unusual field of pack ice and bergs menanced the navigation off the banks.

But it was a clear and starlight night, as all the survivors described the weather, and the great ship sped through the quiet seas with officers confident that even though an iceberg should be seen, the vessel could be controlled in ample time, and the passengers rested in full confidence that their temporary quarters in the largest and most magnificent vessel ever constructed were as safe as at their own firesides.

Felt Sure of Ship.

This confidence is emphasized in the stories of nearly all the survivors, that when the crash came there was practically no excitement. Many who felt anxious enough to go on deck to inquire what had happened were but little perturbed when they learned that the ship had "only struck an iceberg." It appeared to be a glancing blow and at first there was no indication of a serious accident. A group of men at cards in the smoking room sent one of their number to look out of the window and when he came back with the announcement that the boat had grazed an iceberg, the party went on with the game, but it was never finished.

The stoppage of the engines was noticed more than the collision, the effect being, as one survivor put it, like the stopping of a loud ticking clock.

First Note of Danger.

The over-confident passengers were not brought to the slightest realization that the collision might mean serious danger until the call ran through the ship, "All passengers on deck with life belts on."

Capt. Smith, it is said, was not on the bridge when the collision occurred, but when hurriedly summoned by his first officer, he took charge of what seemed a hopeless situation in a manner which the passengers praise as calm, resolute and efficient to the last.

There were sixteen boats in the procession which entered upon the terrible hours of suspense after leaving the Titanic.

The confidence that the ship on which they had started was sure to bring them safely here was now turned to utter helplessness. But the shock of learning that their lives were in peril was hardly greater than the relief when a large steamer's smokestack was seen on the horizon.

The rescue ship proved to be the Carpathia, which had received the Titanic's signals. By 7 o'clock in the morning the Titanic's boats had been picked up and their chilled and hungry occupants welcomed over the Carpathia's side. The Carpathia's passengers, who were bound for a Mediterranean cruise, showed every consideration for the stricken, and many gave up their cabins in order that the survivors of the wreck might be made comfortable. The rescued lacked clothing, and the women on the Carpathia willingly supplied garments.

On the cruise back to New York many who had realized that their experiences would be waited by an anxious world wrote their stories while their nerves were still unstrung.

SAW ASTOR AND STEAD DROWNED

Woman Says They Clung to Raft Until Strength Failed.

New York, April 19.—One version of the deaths of John Jacob Astor and William T. Stead was told by Phillip Mock, who with his sister, Mrs. Paul Schabert, was among the survivors.

"Many men were hanging onto rafts in the sea," said Mr. Mock. "Mr. William T. Stead, the author, and Col. John Jacob Astor, clung to a raft. Their hands became frozen and they were compelled to release their hold. Both were drowned."

According to a surgeon of the New York hospital who went aboard the Carpathia after she docked, four bodies were buried at sea from that steamer.

NEED NO NEW BOAT LAWS

American Regulations Cover All Needs If They Are Enforced.

Agreements With Other Countries Restrict Operation of Rules.

Washington, April 19.—President Taft will not send a special message to congress urging legislation to strengthen the present laws regulating supervision of steamships clearing from American ports. The president believes congress needs no such suggestion since the Titanic's disaster. Moreover, he is satisfied that the laws of the United States are adequate, if enforced as the commerce and labor department would be able to enforce them with the restrictions of present international agreements removed.

Under agreement with Great Britain the certificate of the Titanic that she had met with the requirements of the British Board of Trade as to lifesaving equipment would have been accepted in New York, and the Titanic would have been allowed to clear again for Europe. The disaster, however, undoubtedly will bring about a new agreement between the United States and Great Britain and with other nations in the same class, is the opinion of officials here.

American Rules Strict.

The regulations of the United States as applied to vessels that sail under the American flag or under the flags of nations not in the agreement are strict enough to compel the carrying of lifesaving equipment sufficient to take care of every passenger and every member of the crew.

An act of congress nullifying the existing agreement would make it impossible for officials of the department of commerce and labor to accept a certificate from any board of trade or similar organization unless the requirements of this country were met as well.

SIGNAL LIGHT ON ONE BOAT

Means Furnished for Keeping Small Crafts From Being Separated.

New York, April 19.—C. E. H. Stengel of Newark, N. J., escaped from the Titanic in the only lifeboat that carried lights. He believes that a number of persons owe their lives to the forethought of a member of the crew, who was quickwitted enough to snatch up three green glass lanterns.

"These green lights," explained Mr. Stengel, "shining through the darkness enabled all the boats to keep together in the ice-filled waters."

Describing his escape Mr. Stengel said:

"I put my wife in a boat, and as there was plenty of room I followed. Early in the morning, shortly after we had been picked up, we saw floating far away a gigantic iceberg, with two peaks shining in the morning sun. This, we agreed, was the same berg that sent the Titanic to the bottom."

SPENT SIX HOURS IN CHILL WATER

New York Man Who Leaped From Deck Survives Great Hardship.

New York, April 19.—Peter D. Daly of New York jumped from the deck of the Titanic after it was announced that there were only boats enough for the women and children. As he saw the ship settling gradually he swam away with all his might to prevent being carried down with the suction of the sinking liner.

"For six hours I beat the water with hands and feet to keep warm," he said. "Then I was picked up by one of the Carpathia's boats which was cruising around looking for survivors. I was numb with the cold after a fight which I can scarcely bear to discuss.

"Even after I recovered from the chill and shock I was practically prostrated by the nervous strain, and every mention of the disaster sends a shiver through me.

"There was no violent impact when the vessel collided with the ice. I rushed to the deck from my cabin, got a life preserver, and when things began to look serious threw myself into the water. The boat already had begun to settle."

CLAIMS HE HEARD TWO EXPLOSIONS

Son of Thomas Wollner Tells of Destruction of the Titanic.

New York, April 19.—Hugh Wollner, a son of Thomas Wollner, R. A., of London, says there were two explosions before the Titanic sunk. Wollner believes he was the last person to leave the Titanic. To a friend he said:

"We saw what seemed to be a continent of ice. The iceberg which we struck, I have learned, was very much higher than the bridge of the Titanic. Because of some atmospheric conditions, however, the mountain of ice could not be seen until the Titanic was close to it.

"It was not thought at first that the ship had been dealt a dangerous blow. Everybody took things comparatively easy at first. Some of the men were in the gymnasium taking exercise before retiring. For some minutes after the Titanic struck these men continued with their exercises, not knowing what was passing above.

"Not long after the ship struck there came the first big explosion; then came, a moment later, the second explosion. It was this blast that did the most damage. It blew away the funnels and tore a big hole in the steamer's side and caused the ship to rock as if she was an egg shell. The Titanic careened to one side and passengers making for the boats were shifted into the water. The ship filled rapidly and I jumped into a boat as it swung down the side."

WHITE HOUSE TRAMP CLUB

Unique Institution Established in London for Down-and-Outs.

Where Knights of the Road Gather After Day's Work.

London, April 19.—There is a White House in London as well as in Washington, but the one in this metropolis is not the abode of presidents or even of their equivalents in this country. Instead, London's White House is the heart of Whitechapel, and forms the headquarters of a tramps' club—the only one in existence so far as is known—where Weary Willies and Tired Tims can beguile themselves of an evening with cards, music and light literature, and incidentally get a chance to be somebody again, if they want to.

No affront to the United States, it may be explained, was intended when this historic name was given to a ramshackle building in Settle street, Stepney, that was remodeled, some months back, to be the resort of hoboes. The tramps' club merely happened to be the third of three gathering places for poor folk started in depths of Whitechapel by a big-hearted Roman Catholic priest, Father Richard Wilson—who, by the way, is known throughout the whole East end as the Hopping Parson, and as the first, a sort of cheap restaurant for workingmen, had been named the Red House, and the second, a lunch room for factory girls, the Blue House, patriotism naturally suggested that the third, the tramps' club, should be the White House.

No Sleeping Quarters.

One cannot do a doss at the hoboes' club, nor obtain a cot there. In fact, most of the club members are forced to embark upon an O'Leary after the clubhouse closes at 11 p. m. Which is to say, in the slang of the English sons of rest, that there is no sleeping accommodation at the White House, nor any food given away, and that most of the human derelicts who spend their evenings there have to walk the streets all the rest of the night for want of the fourpence required for a bed in a doss or lodging house. The club, in fact, is just a big well-heated room with a piano, tables for cards and checkers (or draughts as they call them over here), and a few books and papers, including the club magazine, a room which opens at 8 at night and closes at 11, and exists as a foregathering place for men who are too ragged, dirty and generally down at heel to be tolerated even in the free clubrooms that have been opened in this bitterly poor district for ordinary work-people. In fact it was what one might call social prejudice that brought the White House into being, for when the nearby Red House was opened, and it became noised about in the underworld that free music and games were to be enjoyed there of an evening, the Weary Willie element turned up in such numbers and proved so unsavory that the workingmen of the district, to lure whom from the saloons the Red House had been opened, declined to patronize it. So, as Father Richard was too soft-hearted to turn the unwashed away, the tramps' club was started, and everyone made happy.

No Free Food.

Father Richard (most folk in Stepney have forgotten that he has a last name), doesn't believe in the charity that pauperizes—that is why there is no free food and lodging to be had at the club for hoboes. He does believe, however, in holding out a helping hand to the man, even a tramp, who will try to help himself, and so any hobo who would rather be clean than dirty, or would like to spruce himself up a bit to look for a job, can come around to the White House of a morning and get a free shave, a wash and a brush up, as they call it here, and a shine. On two evenings of the week, moreover, a tramp who would rather wear a clean shirt than a dirty one can wash that garment, and have it dried quickly, in a special room in the basement of the White House. These facilities for keeping clean anyhow, Father Richard and his lieutenants regard as tryouts. Hard cases are not made welcome at the tramps' club, and of the regular members, it is the ones who don't shrink from washing who are looked upon as not hopeless wastrels and who are helped by finding them work, to emerge from the down-and-out class.

Club Has Magazine.

On an average, from 100 to 125 tattered specimens of humanity drift into the Seattle Street club every evening to play cards, read and join in the choruses of songs, and practically all of these actually are, or recently have been, on the road. One wastrel hears of the place from another—for the White House is not advertised—such a chance introduction to the place being recorded, in verse, in one of the numbers of the club magazine, which is practically written, and astonishingly well written, considering, by tramps. The poem referred to begins as follows (glimmerling, by the way, means calling cabs and opening the doors thereof, in the hope of a few coppers):

One night as I was glimmering down
Cheapside and the Strand,
A woman who looked very rich put ninepence in my hand.
I went into a coffee-house, and a man upon the doss
Told me he knew a decent place that stood well for a wash.
He took me to the White House, where we had a game of cards,
Which made me think of days gone by,
when times were not so hard.

BABY SLEEPS ALL NIGHT LONG

Mr. W. H. Longworth, Pastor, Orient Congregational Church, Orient, N. Y., writes:

"I just want to write a word of appreciation of your baby food. Our boy is one year old, weighs 25 lbs., and has never had a sick day since we began feeding him Mellin's Food. At three weeks of age his mother's milk did not seem to agree with him. So we began giving him Mellin's Food, and from that day he never kept us up one hour at night. He has not even ever had the colic."

Mrs. R. M. Jones, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"I am using Mellin's Food and our baby is gaining steadily in health and weight. Previous to using Mellin's Food I tried a number of other foods, but none of them agreed with him, he kept losing in weight all the time. I am happy to say that Mellin's Food has restored our baby to perfect health."

COLUMBUS MEMORIAL

Imposing Statue to Be Unveiled at Washington on June 8.

Over 150,000 Visitors Expected to Participate in the Exercises.

Washington, April 19.—At the gateway of the national capital, the plaza of the union station, the United States government will, on Saturday, June 8, unveil an imposing memorial to the memory of Christopher Columbus, the discoverer of America.

While it is sometimes said that governments are ungrateful, it is nevertheless true that when they rise to the needs or demands of situations they invariably do the handsome thing. And while Columbus has had but scant recognition from the United States, it is a matter of universal satisfaction that the government is about to consummate a handsome tribute to the memory of one who was the blazer of the trail in this hemisphere.

By an act of congress, signed by President Roosevelt, March 4, 1907, $100,000 was appropriated for a memorial to Columbus. The act provided that the purpose of the bill be executed by a commission, composed of the chairmen of the committees on the library of the house and senate (Representative McCleary and Senator Wetmore), Secretary of State Root, Secretary of War Taft and the supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus (Edward L. Hearn.) The commission organized by making Secretary Taft chairman of the commission, and appointing the superintendent of public buildings and grounds (Col. Bromwell) the executive officer of the commission.

At Railway Terminal.

The commission went to work with enthusiasm, and after a thorough inspection of the available and desirable sites for a Columbus statue in Washington selected the plaza directly in front of the union station. This railway terminal at the national capital, the largest in the world, is an architectural treasure. The Columbus statue is being set up directly in the center-front of this picturesque building, where the millions of travelers to the Mecca of America cannot fail to see and admire this splendid example of the sculptor's skill.

The memorial takes the form of an immense shaft, at the back of a fountain surmounted by a huge globe indicative of the world, upon which is delineated the Western world in relief, the corners of the globe being guarded by eagles in stone. The figure of Columbus is seen standing on the prow of a caraval, which projects into the fountain. On either side of the shaft are replicas of two men, one indicative of the Old World (an aged patriarch) while the other represents the New World (an Indian.) The back of the shaft carries a medallion of Ferdinand and Isabella.

Of Marble and Granite.

D. H. Burnham & Co., of Chicago are the consulting architects, and this firm drafted the general features of the memorial. Lorado Taft of Chicago was the sculptor of the heroic figure of Columbus. It has been done in marble, and has been commended by critics as a creation in stone of majesty and power. Excepting the figure of Columbus the statue has been executed in white granite. The memorial is all but completed and will be ready for unveiling at least a month in advance of the date set by President Taft, Saturday, June 8.

With the constructive elements of the memorial well in hand, attention is now being turned in an active, vigorous manner to the exercises incident to a fitting unveilling of a tribute to that great discoverer.

The United States government, as represented by President Taft, who has played such a large part in the consummation o fthis tribute to Columbus, and other officers of the executive, congressional and judicial branches of the government, will be on hand to add their meed of praise to the name and fame of the discoverer of America. The complete program of the army and navy participation in the unveiling ceremonials will be announced later.

Plans for Unveiling.

The arrangements for the unveiling are in the hands of a commission of two, composed of Col. Spencer Crosby, superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and Edward L. Hearn of New York city, past supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus, who during his term of office was a member of the Columbus memorial commission, and it was in the nature of a graceful compliment to Mr. Hearn on the part of the order and the commission, that he was invited to assist in the arrangements with the government representative.

The unveiling, which will be preceded by a parade which is expected to equal in numerical importance the inauguration pageants which are a feature every four years in Washington.

The Knights of Columbus, a Catholic fraternal organization, with about 300,000 members in this country, Mexico, Canada and the Philippines, has naturally taken a large interest in the setting up of this memorial to Columbus. Columbus is the order's patron and its members treasure his memory and achievements; therefore, the 1,600 councils of the order have been working with great zeal in the preparations for their participation in the unveiling.

The order has established a headquarters in the Woodward building, Washington, D. C., where daily reports are received from every section of the country. It has been positively stated that up to date 80,000 Knights of Columbus have announced their intention to be in Washington for the unveiling.

From the big cities they will travel in special trains. Even from the Pacific coast parties made up of from 100 to 1,000 will come to the national capital to participate. Illinois will send five train loads, and there will be proportionate numbers from Michigan, New York city and state, California, Connecticut, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Canada, British Columbia and Porto Rico, and other centers; while ten members of the order are on their way to Washington from Manila.

Public Banquet.

Rivaling, if not exceeding, the pageant in splendor will be a public banquet to be held in the evening of June 8, when the president of the United States and his cabinet, members of the diplomatic corps, members of the supreme court, the house and the senate, will be the guests of honor, together with high officials of the church, including Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Busoni, personal representative of the Pope, who will arrive in this country within a few days to take up his archepiscopal residence in Washington. This will be the first public appearance of the new delegate.

The banquet will be held at Convention hall, an immense structure one city block long and over 200 feet wide. The appointments of the banquet will be almost regal in their nature. The service for the banquet will be in the hands of Charles Rauscher of Washington. The souvenirs will be valuable mementos of the occasion.

There will be accommodations at the banquet for 1,800 persons on an unbroken floor space. From every standpoint the dinner will be quite the most notable that the national capital has ever seen. The function is entirely public in its nature and will be a further testimonial on the part of the American people to Christopher Columbus.

GETS THIRTY DAYS FOR USING MAIL FOR FRAUD.

Chicago, April 19.—Maurice W. Crafts, a young Cleveland lawyer, charged with using the mails in attempts to defraud, pleaded guilty before United States District Judge Carpenter and was sentenced to thirty days in jail.

An earnest plea for leniency was made by the young man's uncle, Clayton E. Crafts, former speaker of the Illinois general assembly, and others.

A real estate transaction involving the State Bank of Lagrange, a Chicago suburb, caused the downfall of young Crafts.

Huntsville, Ala., Mayor Adjudges Himself Guilty of Assault.

Huntsville, Ala., April 19.—Having succeeded in thrashing Editor K. E. Pierce of the Daily Times, Mayor R. E. Smith saw no good reason for adding to the injury. When the editor was arraigned before him on Wednesday on a charge of street fighting, Mayor Smith awarded the honors to himself by adjudging himself the aggressor, ordering a complaint sworn to, and then fining himself $10, which he paid.

GENEROUS RELIEF FUND PROVIDED FOR DESTITUTE

Titanic's Needy Survivors Cared for By Host of Eager Workers.

Mrs. August Belmont Serves as Nurse on an Ambulance.

New York, April 19.—Before the Carpathia had reached the Cunard line pier last night, more than $10,000 in contributions was available for the Women's Relief fund to care for the destitute steerage passengers, who were for the most part women and children. All were provided with clothing and comfortably housed, and arrangements have been completed to care for the mas long as is necessary.

Mrs. Abraham Hewitt, a chairman of the relief committee, is being assisted by more than 100 women. The passengers were removed to the Junior League house, the Swiss Benevolent home, the Margaret Louisa home, the Municipal lodging house and the St. Vincent de Paul home.

Cared for in Groups.

At the Cunard pier the steerage passengers were divided into groups—single men and women, men with their wives, women without children and girls, and women with children. The passengers were removed to the temperary homes provided for them in Fifth avenue stages and in automobiles loaned to the Women's Relief fund by merchants and business men. They were accompanied by members of the committee and every arrangement made for their comfort. Those suffering from exposure were sent to hospitals.

Mayor Gaynor has been notified by Jacob H. Schiff, treasurer of the New York state branch of the Red Cross, that the emergency committee of the Red Cross will arrange for the distribution of funds received by the mayor and the various relief committees. In addition to the contributions received by the Women's Relief fund, members of the New York stock exchange have given $20,000, which is available for immediate distribution.

Mrs. Belmont as Nurse.

Society women of New York were kept busy until early today in caring for steerage passengers rescued from the Titanic.

Mrs. August Belmont served as a volunteer nurse on one of the ambulances of St. Vincent's hospital, which was at the Cunard pier when the Carpathia docked.

More than half a score of hospitals sent ambulances, surgeons and nurses to the piers, and the destitute passengers were rendered every possible aid.

Women and children who could not speak English were among those who were removed to the hospitals and cared for by the volunteer nurses. Many of these survivors had lost their husbands and fathers and are without relatives or friends in this country.

water. I recall that I was most fearful of being boiled to death. The second officer, who was on the top deck, told me that he had a similar experience. Innumerable thoughts of a personal nature flashed through my brain.

"Again and again I prayed for deliverance, although I felt sure that the end had come. My greatest difficulty was in holding my breath until I came to the surface.

"I reached the surface after a time that seemed unending. There was nothing in sight save the ice which dotted the ocean and a large field of wreckage and there were dying men and women all about me, groaning and crying piteously.

Swam Near Young Thayer.

"The second officer and J. B. Thayer, Jr., who were swimming near, told me that just before my head appeared above the water one of the Titanic's funnels separated and fell apart near me, scattering the bodies in the water.

"I saw wreckage everywhere. All that came within my reach I clung to. A great, crate-like block of wood floated within my grasp and I grabbed it. It seemed to be sufficiently large to keep me afloat. At this moment, however, I saw an overturned boat a short distance away and swam to it. I caught the arm of a man who grasped it, threw my leg over the boat and rested on it.

"On this raft—it was really a collapsible boat that was called a raft—there were already lying more than twenty men who seemed to belong to the Titanic's crew. Two men, one at the bow, and the other in the stern, propelled us through the wreckage with pieces of wood which answered for oars.

Kept Survivors Off Raft.

"Presently the raft became so full that it seemed she would sink if more came aboard, and the crew, for self-preservation, had to refuse to permit others to climb aboard.

"This was at once the most pathetic and the most horrible scene of all. The piteous cries of those around us still ring in my ears. I will remember them to my dying day.

"'Hold onto what you have, old boy,' we shouted to each man who tried to get aboard. 'One more of you aboard would sink us all,' and many whom we refused answered as they went to their death: 'Good luck, and God bless you.'

"All the time we were buoyed and sustained by hope for rescue. We saw lights in all directions, particularly in front, where green lights shone and rockets were fired in the air. We learned that the lights and rockets came from one of the Titanic's lifeboats.

"Did We Pray?"

"And so we passed the night—with the waves washing over us and the raft hurled deep in the water under our feet.

"Did we pray? Men who seemed to have forgotten long ago how to address their Creator recalled the prayers of their childhood and murmured them over and over again. We said the Lord's Prayer again and again together.

"Long before daylight we stood in columns, two deep, back to back, balancing ourselves, fearful to move lest the delicate balance should be disturbed and all of us thrown again into the water. The hand of God seemed to have smoothed the sea and it was calm.

"An age seemed to have passed when we first saw the twinkling lights of the Carpathia. We knew her and recognized her as our rescuer. The Marconi operator—one of the thirty-five on the raft—confirmed our hopes by saying that he, too, knew that it was the Carpathia. While we looked someone whispered that there was also a ship behind us. We dared not turn about to look, so fearful were we that we would disturb her balance.

"The second officer finally ordered one man to look behind. The slipping of one man would have meant the death, probably, of all of us. The man who looked passed the word that there was no ship behind us.

When Day Broke.

"When the day broke, four of the Titanic's lifeboats were seen on our port side. The second officer blew his whistle to call attention to our precarious condition and the head lifeboat, towing another, came to our help.

"The transfer, fraught with peril followed. The second officer was the last man off the raft. Just before he left it he lifted into the boat the body of a sailor who had died of cold and exposure as we prayed. I, with my soggy overcoat, heavy with water, pitched head foremost into the boat, trying my utmost not to disturb the equilibrium of the craft. In this boat I saw several of my companions on the raft. Others had got into the other boat.

"Our boat, however, had more than its complement, sixty-five persons. Fortunately the Carpathia was close. Otherwise, so officers of the Carpathia afterwards told me, all in the boat would have perished in the moderate blow that came up an hour later.

"We all suffered from cold, especially those of us who had no hats. It seemed an age before we reached the Carpathia, where were all ready for us medical aid, food, and drink to restore us. Nothing can exceed the kindness of those who provided for our needs aboard the Carpathia."

Col. Gracie said his most serious loss was that of his manuscript on the War of 1812, which he had spent a long time in preparing. He said that he would return to England to duplicate the data.

Col. Gracie told a remarkable story of personal hardship and denied emphatically the reports that there had been any panic on board. He praised in the highest terms the behavior of both the passengers and crew and paid a high tribute to the heroism of the women passengers.

"Mrs. Isidor Straus," he said, "went to her death because she would not desert her husband. Although he pleaded with her to take her place in the boats, she flatly refused, and when the ship settled at the head the two were engulfed by the wave that swept her."

FIRST WOMAN TO LEAVE THE SINKING STEAMER.

New York, April 19.—Mrs. Dickinson Bishop of Detroit declared today that she was the first woman in the first boat.

"We floated around a half mile or so from the scene of the disaster for four hours before we were picked up by the Carpathia," she said. "I was in bed when the crash came. I was not much alarmed, but decided to dress and go on deck. By the time I was dressed everything seemed quiet and I lay down in my berth again, assured that there was no danger. I rose again at the summons of a stewardess. There were very few passengers on the deck when I reached there. There was no panic and the discipline of the Titanic's crew was perfect. My husband joined me on the Carpathia and we knelt together and thanked God for our preservation."

OPERATOR'S JOKE SAVES 745 LIVES

Carpathia's Physician Tells How Titanic's Call Was Heard.

New York, April 19.—How the wireless operator on the Carpathia, by putting in an extra ten minutes of duty, was a means of saving 745 lives was told by Dr. J. M. Kemp, the Carpathia's physician, today.

"Our wireless operator," said Dr. Kemp, "was about to retire Sunday night, when he said, jokingly: 'I guess I'll wait just ten minutes, then turn in.

"It was in the next ten minutes that the Tianic's call for help came. Had the wireless man not waited, there would have been no survivors."

Dr. Kemp described the iceberg that sank the Titanic as at least 400 feet long and 90 feet high. He declared that one of the boats that the Carpathia picked up was filled with stokers from the sunken liner.

Thirty Widows on Board.

"It had just two women aboard," he said. The doctor declared that the Carpathia cruised twice through the ice, near the spot where the Titanic sank, and picked up the bodies of three men and one baby.

"On Monday at 8:30 in the evening we held a funeral service on board the Carpathia," continued Dr. Kemp. "At this service there were thirty widows, twenty of whom were under 23 years of age and most of them brides of a few weeks or months. They did not know their husbands were among the dead of the disaster. The Californian and the Burmah, the last named a Russian steamer, cruised about the scene of the wreck for some time in a futile search for the bodies of the victims.

"Mrs. John Jacob Astor," the doctor continued, "had to be carried aboard. She had to be taken into a cabin and given medical attention. She was more completely attired, however, than many of the women who were rescued."

SAYS SHE SAW MEN SHOT AT

Woman Passenger's Account of Titanic Disaster Retold By Friend.

New York, April 19.—That all possible means were taken to prevent the male passengers on board the Titanic from going away in lifeboats and leaving the women and children to perish, is the story told by Miss Lily Bentham of Rochester, N. Y., a second-class passenger, who said she saw shots fired at men who endeavored to get away.

Miss Bentham was in a hysterical condition when the Carpathia landed and was unable to give a full account of what happened, but Mrs. W. J. Douton, of Holley, N. Y., who was not on the Titanic but came to New York to meet her husband, who was lost, retold Miss Bentham's story.

"She hadn't been in bed half an hour," said Mrs. Douton, "when the steward rushed down to the cabin and told her to put on clothes and come up on deck. They were thrown into lifeboats and packed like sardines.

"As soon as the men passengers tried to get to the boats they were shot at. She doesn't know who did the shooting. They rowed frantically away from the ship and were tied to four other boats. She arose and saw the ship sinking. The band was playing 'Nearer, My God, to Thee.'

Boies Thrown Overboard.

"There was a baby in the boat with one of the women. The baby's hands had been cut off. I think it was still alive. The mother did not give it up. During the night, when waiting for the Carpathia, four of the crew died in the boat and were thrown overboard. It was bitter cold and they had to wait until 8 o'clock in the morning before being taken off the lifeboats by the Carpathia."

WOMAN FOUND SWIMMING, SAFE

Mrs. Rose Abbott Survives Fearful Experience in Sea Horror.

New York, April 19.—Services for the burial of the dead at sea were read over the bodies of four men on the Carpathia Monday afternoon by Father Roger Anderson of the Episcopal Order of the Holy Cross. The victims were three of the crew of the Titanic and a passenger found on a raft with thirty-one survivors.

Mrs. Rose Abbott, who was in the water for hours, was restored during the first day.

G. Wikeman, the Titanic's barber, was treated for bruises. He declared that he was blown into the water by the second explosion.

A survivor, who was picked up in a drowning condition, caused grim amusement on the Carpathia by demanding a bath when he revived.

Storekeeper Prentice, one of the last men off the Titanic to reach the Carpathia, swam about in the icy water for hours, but soon was revived. He had leaped from the sinking ship.

All of the Fish Are Frozen to Death.

Deerwood, Minn., April 19.—Thousands of bass, sunfish, perch, pickerel and bullheads are scattered about on the open shores of Reno lake, frozen to death by the severe winter weather. The lake froze solidly, with not an air hole in its surface. It is believed to be the first time in the history of Reno lake that such a phenomenon has occurred.

CONTRACT LET FOR NEW BUILDING

Old Windsor Hotel Will Be Replaced By Modern Structure.

C. E. Henderson, owner of the old Windsor hotel property, is registered at the Spalding hotel today.

The contract for the construction of a three-story building has been let, but Mr. Henderson stated that he was not at liberty to state at the present time until he had a further conference with his agents, just what kind of a building it would be.

"The contract is let," said Mr. Henderson, "and construction on the building will start in the very near future. Just as to all of the details I cannot say at the present time. It will be a fireproof structure with four stories on the Michigan street side and three stories on Superior street. I expect to see my agents later today and will then have more definite knowledge of the plans."

The present hotel is one of the landmarks of Duluth. It has blocked improvement of one of the valuable corners of the city, for the simple reason that a long time lease was held by the renter.

WEST END

WILL SAIL ON A "SLOW BOAT"

West End Party Will Take Baltic in Place of Titanic.

Residents of Duluth and the vicinity, who were planning to join the special party on the trip to Stockholm this summer for the Olympic games, will not be compelled to change their original plans on account of the sinking of the steamer Titanic early Monday morning. The local residents were scheduled to take the Titanic from New York on May 13, and Carl Oksted of Minneapolis, travelling passenger agent of the White Star line, who was in Duluth yesterday, informed Fred W. Erickson of 2032 West Third street, who is in charge of the local party, that arrangements have already been made to sail on the Baltic the same day. The Baltic is one of the company's largest steamers, being nearly 750 feet long, with a displacement of 13,000 tons.

Mr. Oksted, in speaking of the disaster, said that the desire of the Americans to speed across the ocean in as short a time as possible was the cause of the sinking of the Titanic. With the Baltic, the passengers will have what is called a "slow boat" and will be in no danger of collision with icebergs, because of the southerly course. There will be no changes in the leaving time, he said, and the regular schedule of sightseeing in the East will be followed.

DOG POWER GIVES WAY TO ELECTRIC

Faithful "Shep" Loses Job in West End Printing Shop.

Even Shep, the faithful old shepherd dog, has had to give way to science.

Shep at one time was the motive power for the two printing presses belonging to David Adams, 1922 West Michigan street. Mr. Adams is one of the pioneer printers of Duluth and operated a printing shop in the West end long before electric wires were strung in this end of the city.

It was before Duluth had an electric company and in the days of the oil lamp. The foot power press was then in use.

Mr. Adams built a large tread mill the height of his print shop and Shep was given a job walking. This furnished the power for the printing press.

Now Mr. Adams has installed a modern electric motor and Shep is out of a job. The large tread mill has been taken down and the print shop is being modernized.

WILL REORGANIZE OLD WEST END CLUB.

West end business men and residents will meet this evening in George M. Jensen's office, 2117 West First street, to reorganize the West End Commercial club. Special cards have been sent to all the members of the old club and the business and professional men of this end of the city, asking them to attend this meeting. Addresses will be made by several of the prominent business men and officers will be elected for the year. Plans are to be made during the meeting for the first annual banquet of the club to be held the latter part of May.

RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS IN INDIAN SCHOOLS OPPOSED.

President Taft's ruling in the annulment of Order No. 601, issued by the commissioner of Indian affairs at Washington, met wit ha general protest last evening at the Central Baptist church. Twentieth avenue west and First street. The meeting last evening was in charge of the Baptist Brotherhood and a resolution was adopted protesting against President Taft's decision.

Order No. 601, as first issued, provided that no instructor appearing in the garb of any religious denomination shall be allowed to teach in the public schools conducted by the United States. The order was signed by President Taft when it was first introduced by the commissioner of Indian affairs at Washington. Recently President Taft recalled that order and annulled his first signature.

The members of the Central Baptist church are opposed to the last decision of President Taft and the resolution adopted last evening will be forwarded to Washington in a few days. Those who spoke at the meeting of the Brotherhood last evening claim that it is not just for church denominations to use the public money for the furtherance of their beliefs.

WANT TO STAY OUT LATER AT NIGHT.

With the coming of the present warm weather the residents on and above Third street have again asked for later street car service in the evening. People living in that section are compelled to use the Superior street lines after 12 o'clock at night.

A formal request for a later service on the Third street and Grand avenue lines has been placed with the street railway officials by members of the Oneota and Hazelwood Improvement clubs. No answer has been received from the street car company. The matter was first brought up early this winter, but the members of the two clubs decided to wait until the warm weather arrived before urging the request.

The officials of the company have investigated the matter during the past few months, but are anxious to wait until the Twenty-first avenue west cut-off is in use. The cut-off is expected to be finished some time next month, when the Third street cars will go up Twenty-first avenue west to get to Third street. At present the cars go up Piedmont avenue to Third street, where they turn.

HOUSE WARMING IN NEW WOODMAN HALL.

A formal reception and dance, in the form of a house-warming party, will be given Friday evening, May 2, by the Duluth camp No. 2341, Modern Woodmen, in their new hall, Twenty-first avenue west and First street.

Plans for the affair were made last evening by the building committee of the local camp at a meeting held in George M. Jensen's office, 2117 West First street. The following members were present at the meeting: O. W. Olson, George T. Miller, George M. Jensen, L. C. Quade and Charles Hesselstrom. The committee appointed the following sub-committees to arrange the various details for the affair:

Music, L. T. Quade and Charles Hesselstrom; refreshments, George M. Jensen; and tickets and invitations, Charles Shogren, George M. Jensen and L. Johnson. Invitations will be sent to all the members of the camp within a few days. A program of musical numbers and recitations will be given during the evening, which will be following by a supper to be served by the wives of the members.

The furniture for the large assembly hall of the new Woodmen building has all arrived. The other furniture is reported shipped from the manufacturers in the East and is expected here within a few days. The assembly hall will seat 700 people. The various West end societies and lodges, which have leased lodge rooms in the new hall, will move into their new quarters on May 1.

The exact date of the dedication exercises for the building is not known as yet. The members of the executive committee expect to hear from Head Consul Talbert of Omaha, Neb., within a few days as to the exact day when he will be able to come to Duluth and take part in the exercises. It is not probable, said Mr. Jensen this morning, that the exercises will be held before the middle of May.

ANXIOUS TO END SESSION

Leaders Think Congress Would Better Come to an End.

Adjournment Is Desired Before Time of Big Conventions.

Washington, April 19.—Senators and representatives are becoming impatient over the senate's delay on the tariff, appropriation and other important legislation, but the leaders, figuring that the ways can be cleared quickly on emergency, express confidence that congress can adjourn before the national party conventions in June.

The finance committee's adverse report on the steel bill already is before the senate. There will also be a minority report, standing for the Democratic house measure. The house has finished its tariff revision program, unless it should decide to pass a cotton bill based on expectations of favorable action in the senate on the various tariff bills already sent over from the house.

The Progressive Republican iron and steel revision bills, which Senator Cummins is drafting, will make what he calls "quite a reduction" from the present tariff, but not enough to command the first vote of the Democratic senators who later, however, may join the Progressive Republicans on the Cummins proposition.

While the house has passed nine appropriation bills, with six yet to come in from committee, the senate has acted on but one—the urgent deficiency—which became a law in December.

Parcels Post.

The postoffice appropriation bill, which the house will dispose of this week, will precipitate a spirited and prolonged debate because of radical disagreement over its provision for establishing a parcels post system. Most of the Democrats, however, favor the parcels post. The Democratic leaders are planning to pass the bill with that provision retained and the rules committee is prepared to bring in a special rule to meet the expected objection that the parcels post provision is new legislation, and, therefore, not germane to a regular appropriation bill.

The advocates of anti-trust legislation during the present session of congress are determined to press the question. The immediate difficulty lies in getting a bill out of the senate committee on interstate commedce, where several measures are pending. Although Senator Clapp, a Progressive Republican, is chairman of the committee, a majority of its members are opposed to further legislation at this time, and they have contrived to prevent action upon any of the bills.

No Quorum Present.

The committee is composed of sixteen members, making nine necessary to transact business. The committee has been holding almost constant meetings since the middle of last November, but most of them have been for conducting hearings, and it is claimed that at none of them has there been a quorum in attendance. The effect of this non-attendance has been to prevent action.

To meet that difficulty, Senator Cummins, also a Republican Progressive, procured the adoption of a resolution at the last meeting constituting seven members as a quorum, but, after that action had been taken, a question was raised as to the legality of so small a quorum and it has become necessary to determine that point before proceeding to the consideration of the bills before the committee. Seven members of the committee are known to favor legislation, and if the Cummins resolution stands they will be able to force action.

If the supporters of this legislation succeed in getting a bill out of the committee, even though with an adverse report, they will insist upon thorough consideration by the senate, with the possibility of prolonging the session.

HARD FIGHT FOR HIS LIFE

Negro Has Been Tried Seven Times in Texas for Murder.

Six Times Sentenced to Hang —Case Is Now on Appeal.

Austin, Tex., April 19.—In the jail of Dallas county is a negro named Burrell Oates, who has seven times been tried for murder and six times sentenced to be hanged. He has heard the gruesome death sentence pronounced upon him so many times that he no longer manifests any perturbation when it falls from the lips of the jury foreman. An appeal from the decision in the seventh trial of the case was submitted to the state court of criminal appeals at Austin a few days ago.

It is one of the most remarkable cases in the history of Texas criminal jurisprudence. As an instance of the law's delay and the manner in which technicalities may be used to prevent the carrying out of a court sentence in a capital case, it is attracting attention all over the country, especially among the legal fraternity.

The negro is alleged to have murdered Sol Aronoff, a merchant of Dallas. The crime was committed on the night of Nov. 28, 1904. The victim was held up by a white man and a negro. Aronoff's wife entered the store while her husband was being robbed and fired at the negro with a pistol. The white man fired several shots, which killed her husband. On the confession of a white man, who claimed to know of the plans of the robbery, Oates and Holy Bann, his white companion, were held. The negro was identified by Mrs. Aronoff.

The first trial of Oates resulted in his conviction and sentence to death. An appeal was taken to the court of criminal appeals and the case was remanded for new trial on April 12, 1905. The ground for this reversal was an alleged irregularity in drawing names of jurors from the box to select veniremen. It was not charged that the man did not get a fair trial or that jurors who were prejudiced were selected. It was merely a technical point that caused the case to be reversed and remanded.

The second appeal from the death penalty reached the court of criminal appeals and was decided on May 9, 1906. This time the case was again reversed. The technicality that caused this decision was that the jury should have been told that if the wife shot her husband by mistake the prisoner was not guilty of murder. The trial judge should have embraced this in his charge to the jury, it was stated by the court of criminal appeals.

Oates was again tried and convicted, but on May 15, 1907, the case was reversed by the court of criminal appeals on the ground that the trial court did not properly define murder in its charge to the jury.

On June 23, 1909, the case again came before the court of criminal appeals on appeal and the question as to the legality of the appointment of the trial judge was used as the ground for reversing the decision and again remanding it for a new trial. It seems that when the case had been tried the last time W. H. Nelms, who had prosecuted it the first time, was the district judge, having been appointed to that position by Governor Campbell.

Fifth Appeal.

The fifth appeal which was submitted the other day, was based on technicalities. The fifth trial of the case resulted in no verdict as to penalty, one juror standing out for life imprisonment and the other eleven demanding the death penalty.

The sixth conviction of Oates resulted in the granting of a new trial, because the verdict did not state first degree, although under indictment only that degree or acquittal was permissible. It is the sixth conviction and seventh trial that is now before the court of criminal appeals for review. It will be several weeks before a decision is rendered.

It was nearly seven years ago that Oates was arrested for the crime, and he has been in jail ever since. He is 38 years old.

In March, 1909, the negro had a narrow escape from being lynched. A mob broke into the criminal courtroom at Dallas and lynched Allen Brooks, a negro charged with criminal assault. There were cries to lynch Oates, but through the prompt action of Sheriff Ledbetter and his deputies he was removed to a place of safety. He was in jail at Cleburne for safekeeping for some time. He was then taken to the Ellis county jail, where he served several months and was then brought to the Waxahachie jail, in which county he was last tried on change of venue. The sentiment against him at the end of that trial was so strong that in order to save him from being lynched at the hands of a mob he was placed in an automobile and taken to Hillsboro for safekeeping.

Widow His Nemesis.

The widow of Sol Aronoff has proved a veritable Nemesis of the murderer of her husband in the different trials. She has made the long journey all the way from Kansas City on two occasions to be present and testify against the negro.

The celebrated case has been the subject of much discussion at the last three conventions of the Texas State Bar association. At the convention in Fort Worth in July, 1908, Yancey Lewis, an attorney of Dallas, reviewed the case in a facetious manner, in which he pointed out that the white man accomplice of Oates was hanged for the part he took in the crime long years ago.

RECKLESS AUTO DRIVER SENT UP FOR FIVE YEARS.

Newark, N. J., April 19.—Daniel Dugan, Jr., 19 years old, son of District Judge Dugan of Orange, was sentenced by Judge Martin to serve a term of from five to ten years in state prison. He recently was convicted of manslaughter. Young Dugan last December, while driving an automobile at a high rate of speed, ran over and killed Leo McDermott, a boy in Orange.

EIGHTY GONE DOWN WITH CHILEAN BOAT.

San Francisco, April 19.—Details of the loss of the Chilean steamer Cachapoal with eighty lives on the night of March 21, were brought here by the British steamer Queen Helena.

The Cachapoal carried thirty passengers and was manned by British officers and a crew of Chileans. Officers of the Queen Helena said the generally accepted theory was that the Cachapoal sank after her boilers exploded as the boilers had given trouble frequently.

Relief ships were unable to find a trace of the missing steamer after she failed to appear at Payta, Peru, on her regular run, March 22.

BRUCE'S COLUMN

COMMENT AND DIVERS DISCUSSION OF THE MERRY WORLD OF SPORT.

TY COBB has had another fuss with the owners of the Detroit team. This time tyrannical Tyrus was peeved over the fact, pale and insignificant, that his room was probably not the best of the parlor suites. The club owners come to bat with the statement that the self-imposed vacation will do the speed wonder good. He has been ill since the opening of the season, and then, too, Joe Jackson is going like a house afire. This is not to insinuate that Cobb isn't game; for the Georgia Peach has shown commendable courage upon more than one occasion. It is only that the lay-off will do him good and save his average. From some of the things printed about Ty, one has a perfect right to the full grown assumption that he is petted and pampered. But then, at that, maybe you be. We have seen lots of business men not nearly so successful as Tyrus who are pampered by the smaller ones on the ladder. In some cases the pampered ones hadn't even grasped the hand of ability.

Probably when the season is well seasoned, Tyrus will be right up there making his daily or at least tri-weekly sensational play. He is one of the greatest of all players, and genius, since the day the snake kidded Madam Eve into bullying Adam into destroying the apple, has always been peculiar and has always demanded recognition.

THE other night, Wednesday to be explicit, when Jim Flynn strolled down to the Omaha to be whisked Chicagowards, he stopped at the engine and exchanged salutations with the engineer and fireman. That isn't the railroad term, but the greeting was cordial and friendly. Flynn climbed into the cab and chatted for a minute with his brothers. It is a fact that Jim was a locomotive fireman in good standing, and he has all the railroad men rooting for his success.

Johnson's prospective opponent looked at the fireman on the Omaha engine and then mildly opened his eyes. The fellow stood about two inches over the six feet mark and was built as strong as a limburger sandwich.

"A white hope," muttered Flynn.

"Nix with that stuff," cried the brawny one, "I've a steady job here and they pay regularly in our business."

Mister Flynn bid the boys a cheerful adieu and hiked for the parlor car. He used to ride in the cab—and still in the old and grimy days he didn't have to pay to look out of the window at the passing poles.

IN PASSING any opinion on the coming Johnson-Flynn fight, assuming for the time at least that the fight is to be held, one should be chary and wary and several other things. In the first place, the spade has not fought for two years, or almost that time. An athlete can change lots in two years. Some intimate that Li'l Artha is something like 37 years of age. But, taking all these points into consideration, another important matter is that Johnson is pleasure mad and he hates to even think of training. Every champion has had one great fight and then came retrogression, served with the drink and cigars.

This column doped the Jeffries-Johnson fight, as it was logical that Johnson should win. A man can't do the things Jeff did and expect to whip a great fighter, for Artha is that, or was. Now the facts are kind of reversed; for Johnson has been scrambling along the primrose path.

Flynn was never as great a fighter as Johnson was the day he faced Jeffries. How far has Johnson gone back? Has he really gone back? Is he taking this fight as an awful joke? All this and more queries. Any sporting writer that runs amuck making wild predictions on this fight doesn't know the game. It might be a case where the holders of the short odd tickets won.

SOMEHOW the Cubs have not been very successful in the development of young talent. The two teams that won pennants in the majors last season were the aggregations that picked some young talent in the search for stars. Take the wonderful Cubs of 1906 and the years dating therefrom and observe how few new players have come to the aid of the deteriorating machine. George Huff, athletic instructor of the University of Illinois and the same husky chap the conference had such a time over, was the scout who dug up some of the greatest stars of the old Cubs. Murphy allowed this man to get away from the club's clutches. Why? Run for the mind reader!

Let the Chicago Nationals start to lose and you will see just how popular Charlie Murphy is in Chicago. Comiskey is the white collared kid with the populace. His poor old Sox get the most space in the newspapers and they are the drawing magnets. All of which suggests that Murphy and the rest of the company better appreciate a scout of the general merit of Huff. Joking in an inane way, it might be said that it wasn't up to Murphy to have a huff. By getting huffy he lost Huff. Accent on the English.

⊙ ⊙ ⊙ ⊙

MAYBE CARL MORRIS hasn't really quit the ring. He wants to fight Con Comiskey, who, speaking literally, don't know how. One of the governors of one of the Western states has interposed objections and threatens to make the point of the argument clear by calling out the state militia. Morris didn't like fighting Flynn and the real tough ones, but in the case of poor old Con Comiskey, who qualified for the ring through driving a Chicago cab, one tough job, the case is different. This governor shows that he is a good sport by telling them to behave.

HIGH SCHOOL MAY HAVE TEAM

The students of Duluth Central high are scheduled to decide the first of next week whether the school will be represented by a baseball team the present season. Last year the hill top institution had the best interscholastic nine in the northern section of Minnesota and Wisconsin. Many of the stars of last season have been lost and that is the reason of the hesitation over the placing of a team in the field the present season.

There are some good players in the school, it is said, and if the students find that a number of good men can be gotten out, it will probably be decided to organize a team.

WOLVERTON RECEIVING WREATH OF FLOWERS

The new manager of the Yankees, Harry Wolverton, got away to a bad start. Whether the fact that he was presented with a wreath of flowers by his New York admirers had anything to do with the defeat is not certain. At any rate the players are inclined to blame this for the Boston Red Sox's victory. The presentation of flowers and group photographs of the players are certain signs of defeat, according to the old superstition among ball players.

BIG CROWD SEES FIRST GAME AT PITTSBURG.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 19.—In spite of chilly weather a large crowd attended the opening game here between Pittsburg and St. Louis. Pittsburg won in the ninth after two men were out, on a fumble by Houser. Both pitchers were effective, although Hendrix was a trifle wild. Doolin's injured leg bothered him and he retired after the fourth inning, Leach taking centerfield, Wilson being shifted to right. The score:

APOSTLES WILL FARM PLAYERS

Grand Forks May Receive Some of St. Paul's Promising Recruits.

St. Paul, Minn., April 19.—George E. Lennon, principal owner of the St. Paul Baseball club, is considering a proposition to place a team at Grand Forks in the new International league recently organized to succeed the old Northern league. Mr. Lennon's object is to have a suitable place for farming out his surplus young material for the Saints. "I am awaiting specific information from Grand Forks before doing anything definite in the matter," said Mr. Lennon last night.

"If the proposition proves satisfactory there is a strong possibility that I may put a club in Grand Forks. We need some such minor field on which to pasture our young players and break them in, and I think this new Northern league might serve as the ideal training ground for our recruits. However the project is merely in a tentative state at present, and there will be nothing definite done for awhile."

DANIELS WON'T ENTER OLYMPIC

New York, April 19.—C. M. Daniels of the New York Athletic club, America's greatest all around swimmer, will not compete in the Olympic games next July. In a letter received by the Olympic committee, Daniels declares he will be unable to go abroad this winter and asks that his name be scratched from the list of candidates.

The absence of Daniels may deal a death blow to America's chances of winning the relay race, which probably will decide the Olympic rivalry in aquatics between Australia, England, Germany and the United States.

In addition, a trophy of $5,000 for this contest and another $500 for a minor event are offered.

All the trophies are the gift of William Wrigley, Jr., of Chicago. The annual cups go permanently to the winner. One condition is attached to the gifts—all the events must be raced in Chicago.

SUPERIOR RUNS THE NEW LEAGUE

Duluth Has No Voice in Policy Governing the Organization.

As has been the case in the past, Duluth is not even a factor in the baseball league of which she should be the leading spirit.

The Central International organization is being run in Superior. Duluth newspaper men have been referred to the other side of the bay for news. Information of the doings of the body are wired out from Superior while the movers, though that is hardly the word, on this side of the bay profess ignorance of any news or of anything that has been done.

Harry Blume of Duluth is rumored to have been elected president of the new organization. This information came from C. de Cheveral, an employe of the city of Superior, who has been running the league without question or interference from this side of the bay.

From start to finish the organization has been run by Superior men (no joke intended), its news has originated from Superior, and what politics has been developed so far in the very indefinite stage in which the body is, has been controlled by two men on the other side of the ferry path.

Lew Drill, a former Superior manager and personal friend of W. J. Sommer, was offered the job of running the league by Sommer, though Drill's home is in St. Paul. The advertised mail vote was a joke, as Superior so far has taken the matters of the league into its own hand and proceeded calmly and without the least interruption.

Though Duluth has received no information regarding the opening of the season, it may be that the season will start some time in May. It is said that it has been decided to have an official scorer over here, though this information is not at all reliable and must be confirmed by Sommer and de Cheveral.

BASEBALL

Kid Elberfield and Clark Griffith are still quarreling. The veteran infielder claims he should be given an unconditional release so that he can find a managerial job in some minor league. Griffith thinks the Kid is trying to work him by claiming he is not fit to play, so has ordered him to report to the team at once.

• • •

Hughie Duffy of the Milwaukee Brewers has made an offer for Elberfield, but Manager Griffith has not decided to accept the offer of the Milwaukee leader.

Harry Wolverton is not having any snap in getting the Highlanders started right. Even the Senators are taking more than their share of the games from the New Yorkers.

Hughie Jennings says that five clubs have a good chance to beat the Athletics. The Tiger leader differs from most of all of the other wise judges in this respect, and it begins to look as if he was wrong, for the Athletics are travelling too fast to be overtaken easily.

The real reason for the departure of Ty Cobb for home was given out yesterday. He has not been hitting the ball with any success at all since the start of the season, and he wanted to lay off until he got over his streak of bad luck.

White Sox leave tonight on a trip that will keep them on the road until June 1, with the exception of a four-game series with the Naps here next week.

Vitt, who is playing left field for the Tigers, was recruited from the San Francisco club, where he played alongside Weaver.

Tigers Sold.

Detroit, Mich., April 19.—President Navin of the Detroit American league baseball club today announced the sale of Utility Infielder O'Leary and Catcher Casey to the Indianapolis team of the American association. O'Leary joined the Tigers in 1903 while Casey was purchased in the fall of 1910.

JARVINEN WINS THE TITLE FROM LEHTO

Young Finnish Giant Easily Disposes of the Champion in Two Straight Falls, Showing Wonderful Strength.

Alex Jarvinen is the undisputed holder of the catch-as-catch-can wrestling championship of the Finnish race and is without serious doubt or dispute the greatest wrestler that this hardy and athletic-loving country has ever produced.

Towering above Karl Lehto last night in the big arena of the spacious Auditorium, Jarvinen outclassed his smaller opponent, showing strength that was wonderful, a speed that baffled all the attacks of Lehto and a knowledge of the modern art of wrestling that stamps the giant as an apt student. Jarvinen won in two straight falls, 43:40 and 13:20.

To Lehto goes all credit. He was game and willing to the end. He was aggressive and often carried the battle to the giant facing him, but the really marvelous strength of Jarvinen made the most effective holds of Lehto futile.

Jarvinen seemed to break holds with the ease of some large boy breaking away from the clasp of petulant little brother. His strength brought expressions of wonderment from the crowd. But in addition to his vast strength of back, shoulders and arms, the young giant showed that he knows leverage, posture of defense and the best holds of the catch-as-catch-can game.

At the start of the contest Jarvinen was cautious and felt Karl out. His peculiar method of holding his long arms out in front of him, like a boxer, caused roars of laughter to travel around the hall. But once Jarvinen felt out his man an expression of confidence overspread the face of the genial giant and he proceeded deliberately and calmly to slowly wear his opponent down.

Lehto tried desperately to stem the tide of defeat rising to engulf him. He has held the catch-as-catch-can title for four years and he fought like a mad man to avert defeat. At times he butted the big fellow and at other times used his hands in the manner of a sparring man, but through it all Jarvinen merely grinned and pressed in, throwing Lehto around and showing his mastery of the situation.

If there has ever been a suspicion that Lehto is not game this belief was dissipated by the work of the young Finn from Hancock. He tore into Jarvinen and he never whimpered when the grinning giant retaliated in a mild and surprised spirit of protest.

Several times during the first bout Jarvinen had Lehto in a bad way, but the smaller man wriggled free. Finally the giant worked Lehto to the mat in a corner of the ring and started a hammer lock or half nelson on him, in their position it being difficult to determine precisely.

From this hold the giant quickly and like a true workman switched to a scissors around the head and a wrist lock. In a peculiar and most perplexing tangle the men lay, the strength of Jarvinen and the deadly hold slowly but surely bearing the protesting shoulders of Lehto to the canvas.

No Doubt of Outcome.

After the first fall there could be little doubt over the result of the match. During the forty-three minutes of struggling Lehto had been on the offensive for the greater part of the time and he had tired himself out in his attacks on the huge man in front of him. Calmly and deliberately Jarvinen had nursed his strength, with the result that he was as fresh as the proverbial daisy.

With the call of time for the second bout Jarvinen seemed to have the exact measure of Lehto and he went about his work like a good carpenter or skilled mechanic. In this bout Lehto tried his rough work, butting Jarvinen several times and rushing at him like an infuriated bull. But Jarvinen foiled all the attacks, and by strenght that was remarkable, bore Lehto around the ring, exactly as the moving pictures showed the giant Jack Johnson carting little Tommy Burns around the Rush Cutters bay ring of Australia.

The end was inevitable. Lehto wriggled free from two painful double arm holds that Jarvinen secured by his peculiar rolling trick and once squirmed and wriggled free from a hammerlock. But finally Jarvinen clamped a hammerlock and ran Lehto's arm far up his back. The small man suffered excruciating pain before he yielded, but with the alternative of a broken arm he gave in to the mastery of the greatest Finn wrestler that his race has yet produced.

With a yell the big Finnish representation made for the ring and crowded around the victor. Towering above the gathering Jarvinen stood and grinned like a big kid, shaking hands with his excited and admiring countrymen and smiling to those who kept on the edge of the crowd.

And then he did a gracious act. He strode to the spot where poor Lehto sat crestfallen, suffering the isolation of defeat that is ever the lot of the vanquished, and he shook the hand of the loser, apologizing in his native tongue for hurting the smaller man.

"He is too big, too strong," said Lehto in his broken English. "He is stronger than Ordemann, Roller and Gotch. He is good man, but he too big for me.

In the preliminaries little Louis Zorbas showed that he is a remarkable little grappler by winning two straight falls from Billy Harvey, one of the gamest and slipperiest youngsters who ever appeared at one of the G. D. A. C. shows.

Sailor Jack won from Walter Nesgoda, the little Pole, pinning his shoulders to the mat in 23 minutes.

With the closing wrestling show of the season comes the discovery that Duluth has at last really secured one of the greatest wrestlers in the world. Jarvinen is a star today; tomorrow he may be one of the very greatest mat men. Since his initial appearance here he has learned, and with further training under Ilia Vincent, a mat master, there is no telling just how good he will become.

MANY BALL GAMES WERE POSTPONED

Rain Interfered at Nearly All Cities of Three Leagues Yesterday.

Rain again interfered with baseball in three leagues yesterday, there being but two games played, one in the National and one in the American.

In the American Chicago defeated St. Louis, 12 to 7 and in the National, Pittsburg beat St. Louis, 4 to 3.

But four games have been played in the three leagues in two days.

BILLY NOLAN AGAIN.

Battling Nelson's Former Manager May Pilot Abe Attell.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 19.—Bill Nolan, who, as the manager of Battling Nelson, showed owl-like wisdom and broke the world's record for stubbornness, is in Los Angeles.

Regarding the report that he is to handle Abie Attell's business in the future, Billy states that this talk is a trifle premature.

"Able knows my terms. I will expect the same percentage from him that I got from Nelson, which was—sufficient. If he accepts I will handle him," says Nolan.

"If Attell will train in the gymnasium instead of the poker room he will be the world's featherweight champion again inside of a year. This thing of looking for straights and flushes that ain't there is a great strain on a man's eyesight. Stacking checks and riffling cards may be good exercise for the wrists and fingers, but it doesn't help a boxer's wind.

ETTOR INDICTED AS MURDER ACCESSORY.

Newburyport, Mass., April 19.—Indictments charging Joseph J. Ettor and Arturo Giovannitti with being accessories before the fact to murder, were returned by the Essex county grand jury. The two men, who were Industrial Workers of the World leaders in the recent textile strike at Lawrence, also were indicted on charges of conspiracy to intimidate. The murder charges grew out of the shooting of a woman during the recent strike riots here.

HIGHER PAY FOR COPPER MINERS

Calumet & Hecla Announces an Increase of 10 Per Cent in Wages.

Calumet, Mich., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—There is much gratification in the Copper country today over the announcement made by the Calumet & Hecla Mining company management of an increase of 10 per cent in wages for its employes and those of ten subsidiy companies. More than 8,000 men will be affected. Increase is the result of the rise in the selling price of copper to over 16 cents a pound.

DOCTOR AND WIFE FIRST OFF THE CARPATHIA.

New York, April 19.—Dr. Henry Frauenthal and his wife of this city were the first persons off the Carpathia. They were driven off quickly in an automobile without having spoken to any one.

They were followed off the ship by a man who said he was James Googt of Philadelphia. Googt was met by two brothers and a sister and after a short statement he was driven away.

FINNS COMING TO COPPER COUNTRY LOST.

Calumet, Mich., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—Word has been received that fifty-four Finns bound for the copper and iron countries were on board the White Star liner Titanic when she struck an iceberg off the coast of Newfoundland and all probably perished.

S.S.S. PURELY VEGETABLE

The absolute vegetable purity of S. S. S. has always been one of the strongest points in its favor, and is one of the principal reasons why it is the most widely known and universally used of all blood medicines. A great many of the so-called blood purifiers are really nothing more than strong mineral mixtures which act so unpleasantly and disastrously on the delicate membranes and tissues of the stomach and bowels, that even if such treatment purified the blood, the condition in which the digestive system is left would often be more damaging to the health than the original trouble. Not so with S. S. S.—it is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and at the same time is an absolutely safe and harmless remedy. It is made entirely of the healing and cleansing extracts and juices of roots, herbs and barks, each of which is in daily use in some form by physicians in their practice. Years of work and research have proven S. S. S. to contain everything necessary to purify the blood and at the same time supply the system with the purest and best tonic effects. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison and all other blood troubles, and it leaves the system in perfect condition when it has purified the blood. Book containing much valuable information on the blood and any medical advice desired sent free to all who write.

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

THRILLING STORY OF THE DISASTER OF THE TITANIC IS TOLD BY L. BEASLEY OF LONDON, ONE OF SURVIVORS OF THE TRAGEDY THAT COST MORE THAN 1,500 LIVES

New York, April 19.—Following is the account of Mr. Beasley of London, one of the survivors of the Titanic:

"The voyage from Queenstown had been quite uneventful; very fine weather was experienced and the sea quite calm. The wind had been westerly to southwesterly the whole way, but very cold, particularly the last day; in fact after dinner on Sunday evening it was almost too cold to be out on deck at all.

"I had been in my berth for about ten minutes when at about 11:15 p. m I felt a slight jar, and then soon after a second one, but not sufficiently large to cause any anxiety to any one, however, nervous they may have been. However, the engines stopped immediately afterward and my first thought was: 'She has lost a propeller.'

Was No Anxiety.

"I went up on the top (boat) deck in a dressing gown and found only a few people there, who had come up similarly to inquire why we had stopped, but there was no sort of anxiety in the minds of anyone. We saw through the smoking room window a game of cards going on and went in to inquire if they knew anything; it seems they felt more of the jar, and looking through the window had seen a huge iceberg go by close to the side of the boat. They thought we had just grazed it with a glancing blow, and the engines had been stopped to see if any damage had been done.

"No one, of course, had any conception that she had been pierced below by part of the submerged iceberg. The game went on without any thought of disaster and I retired to my cabin to read until we went on again.

"I never saw any of the players or the onlookers again.

Heard Others Going Up.

"A little later, hearing people going upstairs, I went out again and found everyone wanting to know why the engines had stopped. No doubt many were awakened from sleep by the sudden stopping of a vibration to which they had become accustomed during the four days we had been on board. Naturally, with such powerful engines as the Titanic carried, the vibration was very noticeable all the time, and the sudden stopping had something the same effect as the stopping of a loud-ticking grandfather's clock in a room.

"On going on deck again, I saw that there was undoubted list downward from stern to bow, but knowing nothing of what had happened, concluded some of the front compartments had filled and weighed her down.

"I went down again to put on warmer clothing, and as I dressed, heard an order shouted:

"'All passengers on deck with life belts on.'

"We all walked slowly up, with them tied on over our clothing, but even then presumed that this was a wise precaution the captain was taking, and that we should return in a short time and retire to bed.

Total Absence of Panic.

"There was a total absence of panic or expression of alarm, and I suppose this can be accounted for by the exceedingly calm night and the absence of any signs of the accident. The ship was absolutely still, and except for a gentle tilt downward, which I don't think one person in ten would have noticed at that time, no signs of the approaching disaster were visible. She lay just as if she were waiting the order to go on again when some trifling matter had been adjusted. But in a few moments we saw the covers lifted from the boats and the crews standing by and coiling up the ropes to lower them into the water.

"We then began to realize it was more serious than had been supposed, and my first thought was to go down and get more clothing and some money, but seeing people pouring up the stairs, decided it was better to cause no confusion to people coming up by doing so.

Men Stood Back, Silent.

"Presently we heard the order: 'All men stand back away from the boats and all ladies retire to next deck below,' the smoking room deck or B deck. The men all stood away and remained in absolute silence, leaning against the end of railings of the deck, or pacing slowly up and down. The boats were swung out and lowered from A deck. When they were to the level of B deck, where all the ladies were collected, the ladies got in quietly, with the exception of some who refused to leave their husbands. In some cases they were torn from them and pushed into the boats, and in other instances they were allowed to remain because there was no one to insist they should go.

"Looking over the side, one saw boats from aft already in the water, slipping quietly away into the darkness, and presently the boats near to me were lowered with much creaking, as the new ropes slipped through the pulley blocks down the ninety feet which separated them from the water. An officer in uniform came up as one boat went down and shouted, 'When you are afloat, row around to the companion ladder and stand by with the other boats for orders.'

"'Aye, aye, sir,' came up the reply, but I don't think any boat was able to obey the order. When they were afloat and had the oars at work the condition of the rapidly settling boat was so much more a sight for alarm for those in the boats than those on board, that in common prudence the sailors saw they could do nothing but row from the sinking boat to save at any rate some lives. They no doubt anticipated that suction from such an enormous vessel would be more than usually dangerous to a crowded boat most of filled with women.

No Hysteria Among Women.

"All this time there were no traces of any disorder, panic or rush to the boats, and no scenes of women sobbing hysterically such as one generally pictures as happening at such times; every one seemed to realized so slowly that there was imminent danger. When it was realized that we might all be presently in the sea with nothing but our life belts to support us until we were picked up by some passing steamer, it was extraordinary how calm everyone was and how completely self controlled.

"One by one the boats were filled with women and children, lowered and rowed away into the night. Presently the word went around among the men, 'the men are to be put in boats on the starboard side.' I was on the port side and most of the men walked across the deck to see if this was so. I remained where I was and presently heard the call: 'Any more ladies?'

"Any More Ladies?"

"Looking over the side of the ship, I saw boat No. 13 swinging level with B deck, half full of ladies. Again the call wes repeated: 'Any more ladies?'

"I saw none come and then one of the crew looked up and said, 'Any more on your deck, sir?'

"'No,' I replied.

"'Then you had better jump.'

"I dropped in and fell in the boat. As the boat began to descend, two ladies were pushed hurriedly through the crowd on B deck and heaved over into the boat, and a baby of 10 months was passed down after them. Down we went, the crew calling to those lowering which end to keep her level—'aft,' 'stern,' 'both together' until we were some ten feet from the water—and here occurred the only anxious moment we had during the whole of our experience, from leaving the deck to reaching the Carpathia.

Lifeboat in Danger.

"Immediately below our boat was the exhaust condenser, a huge stream of water pouring all the time from the ship's side just above the water line. It was plain we ought to be kept away from this, not to be swamped by it when we touched the water. We had no officer aboard, nor petty officer or member of the crew to take charge. So one of the stokers shouted, 'Some one find the pin which releases the boat from the ropes and pull it up.'

"No one knew where it was. We felt as well as we could on the floor and sides, but found nothing and it was hard to move among so many people—we had sixty or seventy on board.

"Down we went and presently floated with our ropes still holding up. The exhaust was holding us away from the side of the vessel and the swell of the sea surging us back against the side again. The result of all these forces was an impetus which carried us parallel to the ship's side and directly under boat No. 14, which had filled rapidly with men and was coming down on us in a way that threatened to submerge our boat.

"Stop Lowering 14."

"'Stop lowering 14' our crew shouted and the crew of No. 14 now only twenty feet above, shouted the same. But the distance to the top was some seventy feet and the creaking pulleys must have deadened all sound to those above, for down she came, fifteen, ten feet, five feet, and a stoker and I reached up and touched her swinging above our heads. The next drop would have brought her on our heads, but just before she dropped another stoker sprang to the ropes with his knife

"'One,' I heard him say; 'two,' as his knife cut through the pulley ropes, and the next moment the exhaust stream had carried us clear, while boat 14 dropped into the water into the space we had a moment before occupied, our gunwales almost touching. We drifted away easily as the oars were got out, and headed directly away from the ship.

"The crew seemed to me to be mostly cooks in white jackets, two to an oar, with a stoker at the tiller.

Stoker Took Command.

"There was a certain amount of shouting from one end of the boat to the other, discussions as to which way we should go, but finally it was decided to elect the stoker, who was steering, captain, and for all to obey his orders. He set to work at once to get into touch with the other boats, calling to them and getting as close as seemed wise, so that when the boats came in the morning to look for us, there would be more chance for all to be rescued by keeping together.

"It was now about 1 o'clock in the morning, a beautiful starlight night, with no moon and not so very light; the sea was calm as a pond, just a gentle heave as the boat dipped up and down in the swell; an ideal night except for the bitter cold for any one who had to be out in the middle of the Atlantic ocean in an open boat, and if ever there was a time when such a night was needed, surely it was now, when hundreds of people, mostly women and children, were afloat, hundreds of miles from land.

Looked Back to Titanic.

"The captain-stoker told us that he had been at sea twenty-six years and had never yet seen such a calm night on the Atlantic. As we rowed away from the Titanic we looked back from time to time to watch her, and a more striking spectacle it was not possible for any one to see.

"In the distance she looked an enormous length, her great bulk outlined in black against the starry sky, every port hole and saloon blazing with light. It was impossible to think anything could be wrong with such a leviathian were it not for the ominous tilt downwards in the bow, where the water was by now up to the lowest row of port holes. Presently, about 2 a. m., as near as I can remember, we observed her settling very rapidly, with the bows and the bridge completely under water, and we concluded it was now only a question of minutes before she would go down, and so it proved.

Tilted Straight on End.

She slowly tilted straight on end, with the stern vertically upwards; the lights in the cabins and saloons, which had not flickered for a moment since we left, died out, came on again for a single flash, and finally went out altogether. At the same time the machinery roared down through the vessel with a rattle and a groaning that could be heard for miles, the worst sound surely that could be heard in the middle of the ocean, a thousand miles away from land.

"But this was not quite the end. To our amazeemnt she remained in that upright position for a time which I estimated as five minutes; others in the boat say less, but it was certainly some minutes while we watched at least 150 feet of the Titanic towering above the sea, and looming against the sky. Then, with a quiet, slanting dive she vanished beneath the waters, and our eyes had looked for the last time on the vessel on which we had set ut from Southhampton lest Wednesday. And there was left to us the gently heaving sea; the boat filled to standing room with men and women in every conceivable condition of dress and undress; above, the perfect sky of brilliant starts with not a cloud in the sky, all tempered with a bitter cold that made us all long to be one of the crew who toiled away with the oars and kept themselves warm thereby—a curious, deadening, bitter cold unlike anything we had felt before.

Cries of the Drowning.

"And then with all these there fell on the ear the most appalling noise that human being ever listened to—the cries of hundreds of our fellow beings struggling in the icy water, cries for help that we knew could not be answered. We longed to return and pick up some of those swimming, but this would have meant swamping our boat and the further loss of the lives of all of us.

"We tried to sing to keep the women from hearing the cries, and rowed hard to get away from the scene of the wreck, but I think the memory of those sounds will be one of the things the rescued will find it difficult to efface from their memory. We are all trying hard not to think of it.

"We kept a lookout for lights, and several times it was shouted that steamers' lights were seen, but they turned out to be either a light from another lifeboat or a star down the horizon.

Deceived by the Aurora.

"About 3 a. m. we saw faint lights showing on the sky, and all rejoiced to see what we expected was the coming dawn, but after watching for half an hour and seeing no change in the intensity of the light, we realized it was the northern lights.

"Presently, low down on the horizon we saw a light which slowly resolved itself into a double light, and we watched eagerly to see if the two lights would separate and so prove to be only two of our boats, or whether they would remain together. In which case we should expect them to be masthead light and a deck light below, of a rescuing steamer.

"To our joy they moved as one, and round we swung the boat, and headed for her. The steersman shouted: 'Now boys, sing' and for the first time the boat crew broke into song with 'Row for the Shore, Boys' and for the first time tears came to the eyes of all of us as we realized for the first time that safety was at hand. The song was sung, but it was a very poor imitation of the real thing, for quavering voices make poor songs. A cheer was given next, and that was better—you keep in tune for a cheer.

Coming of the Carpathia.

"Our rescuer showed up rapidly, and as she swung round we saw her cabins all alight and knew she must be a large steamer. She was motionless now and we had to row to her. Just then day broke, a beautiful dawn with faint pink clouds just above the horizon, and a new moon whose crescent just touched the horizon.

"'Turn your money over, boys' said our cheery steersman, 'that is, if you have any' he added.

"We laughed at him for his superstition at such a time, but he countered very neatly by adding: 'Well, I shall never say again that thirteen is an unlucky number—boat 13 has been the best friend we ever had.' Certainly the thirteen superstition is killed forever in the minds of those who escaped from the Titanic in Boat No. 13. As we neared the Carpathia we saw in the dawning light what we thought was a full rigged schooner standing up near her, and presently behind her another, all sails set, and we said:

Took Icebergs for Boats.

"'They are fisher boats from the Newfoundland banks and have seen the steamer lying to and are standing by to help,' but in another five minutes the light shone pink on them, and we saw they were icebergs towering many feet in the air, huge, glistening masses, deadly white, still, and peaked in a way that had suggested a schooner. We glanced around the horizon and there were others wherever the eye could reach. The steamer we had to reach was surrounded by them, and we had to make a detour to reach her, for between her and us lay another huge berg. We rowed up to the Carpathia about 4:30 a. m. and were hoisted or climbed up the ship's side with very grateful hearts.

Reception of Survivors.

"We were received with a welcome that was overwhelming in its warmth, and I should like to say here that there is not a member of the Titanic on board who feels capable of expressing in adequate terms his gratitude for the attentions showered upon us by tht captain, officers and crew and passengers on board the Carpathia. They were called on suddenly in mid-ocean to receive, they thought, 3,000 passengers and crew, and although this was not to be, they made every arrangement for so doing. Hot meals, blankets and berths were provided for each as we came on board. Clothing and money was supplied individually by passengers. Berths were given up by men, who slept on the smoking room floor or anywhere else that a corner could be found.

"The ship has sent off hundreds of Marconigrams free of charge to anxious relations. The catering arrangements in charge of the purser and stewards have been so well organized that it would not be possible to be better served had we been regular passengers aboard our own ship.

"The captain has placed all private messages to friends in front of press messages—in fact he has refused to send any press messages beyond a bare twenty words to press associations and the names of all those saved, placing the needs of the private passengers of the Titanic in front of any 'copy' for the press."

The above account of the accident was given by L. Beasley, a Cambridge university man, who resides in London. Mr. Beasley was in the second cabin and had not been mentioned in the list of the saved.

GREAT CROWDS MEET BOAT

(From Thursday Night's Extra.)

New York April 18.—Never, probably, in the history of this city has any steamship been awaited with such terrible eagerness as was the Cunard liner Carpathia when she steamed up to her dock tonight. Early in the day it was given out that the presence of a heavy fog over the outer harbor would retard her progress, and that her arrival, originally set for midnight, would be delayed until 1 o'clock or possibly later. Then came word that the fog was lifting, and once more the city began to prepare for a midnight reception such as never before has been enacted in the history of mankind.

Late in the afternoon announcement was made at the Cunard line offices that the Carpathia would dock about 11 o'clock. Soon afterward this time was changed to 9 o'clock, and within half an hour after the word had been spread about the city a mighty migration toward the Cunarder's pier began.

Then began a riot of rumors, false reports, exaggerations that sprang from nobody knew where and were based on nobody knew what. One report was that the Carpathia had had a collision and was sinking in the harbor. Another that she had broken down and would be unable to reach the pier under her own steam. One of the most authentic rumors, apparently, was that scores of the survivors of the Titanic had died on the way to this port, a rumor that was lent a color of truthfulness by being coupled with the name of a prominent undertaking establishment, whose manager was said to have received orders that 250 coffins be ready at the pier to receive the bodies of the dead. This last story later was denied by the Cunard officers.

It was 6:20 o'clock when word was flashed throughout the city that the Carpathia, with its load of rescued widows and orphans was off Sandy Hook, and the city knew that 9 o'clock at the latest would see her at her own pier. Preparations that had been under way for two days were rushed to a hurried conclusion. Relief agencies were set ready to get into immediate action the moment the first of the rescued should set their feet—or be carried—upon the dock. Ambulances that it was believed would be useful, if not actually needed, were got in readiness and sent to the pier, in order to avoid the crush that it was apparent would occur when once the vessel reached her place.

In order to expedite the arrival, the usual practices of quarantine were dispensed with and the port doctors, instead of detaining the Carpathia for an examination of her papers and passengers and crew, boarded her at the outer limits and made their inspection while she was proceeding up the harbor. So urgent was the haste with which she was being brought in that no stop was made even to take the physicians aboard. The Carpathia merely slowed down as the doctors' boat came alongside, and the medical men clambered aboard. She immediately took on the customary harbor speed and made her way toward the place which was to prove a wonderful haven to the hapless survivors of the greatest marine disaster of modern times.

In a drizzling rain, 250 policemen gathered early tonight at the Cunard line piers at West Fourteenth street and North river preparatory to handling the crowds. Inspector McClasky was in charge of the squad, and ropes, dotted with green lights, were stretched for seventy-five yards in front of the piers to hold back the throngs. No one without a special permit was allowed beyond these ropes. As early as 8 o'clock automobiles, in which veiled women and silent men were seated began arriving and by 8:30 a small crowd had already entered the great steel and concrete structure which covers the piers.

A small hotel across the way had been converted into headquarters for the newspapers and press associations and a meeting place for those who had been bereaved or had relatives aboard the Carpathia. Although there was no rule for silence, everyone talked in whispers. In this assemblage there were those who hoped against hope that some relative was alive, although the list of survivors had failed to show their names.

The police regulations were made more rigid as the evening wore on. All traffic on West street directly in front of the piers was diverted at Fourteenth street on the north and at Thirteenth street on the south. Another line was drawn on the east at Eleventh avenue. Thus the entire block immediately in front of the piers was held sacred to those immediately concerned in the tragedy.

Shortly before 8 o'clock news came that the Carpathia was passing the Statue of Liberty. At that hour more than fifty automobiles were parking in front of the piers.

The early arrival of the Carpathia at Quarantine surprised even the customs officials, 150 of whom were on the pier under the direction of Gen. Nelson P. Henry, surveyor of the port, who came to facilitate the landing of the survivors.

Five hundred friends and relatives had gathered inside the pier sheds at 8:30 o'clock, taking up their positions under the customs alphabetical arrangement, each one under the initial of the name of the survivor awaited. The Carpathia at this time was a quarter of a mile down the Hudson and drawing near the docks. A stream of people was filing into the pier entrance and automobiles continued to take their places in the street.

A committee from the New York Stock Exchange arrived at the pier shortly before the Carpathia arrived, bringing $20,000 in cash to be distributed among those most in need. This money was raised on the exchange by popular subscription and brought to the pier in an oblong box. The committee was composed of E. H. Thomas, president of the exchange; Charles Noblecok, H. N. Barruch, Charles Holsdoner and J. Carlile. Surveyor Henry assigned to their use the little customs house on the pier.

Several Red Cross nurses and a dozen physicians arrived upon the pier and two ambulances from St. Vincent's hospital stood outside. The Pennsylvania Railroad company had a special train waiting at their station at Thirty-fourth street, and a number of taxicabs to convey survivors desiring to go to Philadelphia to their friends.

An apartment for J. Bruce Ismay had been secured at the Ritz-Carlton hotel.

Representatives of the Widener families of Philadelphia were early arrivals at the dock, having chartered a special train over the Pennsylvania. There were a thousand persons on hand at 8:30 o'clock, many of whom were weeping. Outside the automobiles kept arriving.

The Carpathia was off the end of the pier ready to dock at 7 minutes to 9 o'clock. The pilot of a tugboat engaged to assist in warping her in announced that she could not dock until high water. Lines were taken off. A large number of Sisters of Charity from the various hospitals arrived in a number of ambulances. A commissioner of immigration was present to expedite the landing of a number of steerage passengers.

J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., was among the early arrivals at the dock. Friends of the survivors continued to drive up in motor cars in large numbers.

The scene at this time in and about the great pier was one of intense expectancy. The crowds had steadily augmented, but there was perfect order and an awed air of waiting. Automobiles continued to arrive in great numbers. Within the vast enclosure the company of people was dense, notwithstanding the precautions, and the limit which had been placed upon the number of passes issued, but it was serious and orderly.

As the Carpathia was passing into her slip she was surrounded by newspaper boats and there were frequent flashes from cameras which were taking flashlight photographs of the rescue ship, punctuating the silence like a series of bombs.

The great ship came up slowly and had a hard time docking. Her decks were black with passengers.

Scores of white-clad hospital attendants were on hand with stretchers while prepared for the worst, there was also a detail from the coroner's staff. Many invalid chairs also were rolled up to the pier entrance and the doctors and nurses went aboard.

The first survivors began to leave the ship at 9:35.

Word that the Carpathia was outside of the harbor and rapidly approaching sent thousands of persons to vantage points along the city's water front. At the Battery, the first point of Manhattan island, a crowd estimated at 10,000 assembled. Other vantage points further up town were crowded with spectators eager to catch the first glimpse of the approaching Carpathia.

SAVED BY LEAPING INTO SEA BEFORE BOAT SANK.

New York, April 19.—E. Z. Taylor of Philadelphia, one of the survivors, jumped into the sea just three minutes before the boat sank. He told a graphic story as he came from the Carpathia

NEWSPAPER MAN WHO WAS PASSENGER ON THE TITANIC TELLS STORY OF WRECK

(By Carlos F. Hurd, Post-Dispatch staff reporter, who arrived on the Carpathia tonight. Copyright, 1912, by Pulitzer Publishing company, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, all rights reserved.)

New York, April 19. — Seventeen hundred and twenty-six lives were lost on the Titanic which struck an iceberg at 11:45 p. m. Sunday and were at the ocean's bottom 2 hours and 35 minutes after. Of the Titanic's 641 first cabin passengers, 212 were saved; 154 of them were women and children and of the 262 second cabin passengers, 115 were saved, 102 of them were women and children.

Of the third class, 800 in number, 136 were saved, 83 of whom were women and children. Of 985 officers and crew, 199, including 22 women, were rescued.

No survivor can question the courage of the crew, hundreds of whom gave their lives with a heroism which equaled, but could not exceed, that of John Jacob Astor, Henry B. Harris, Jacques Futrelle and others in the long list of first cabin passengers.

The bulkhead system, though probably working, prevailed only to delay the ship's sinking.

Boilers Exploded.

The position of the ship's wound on the starboard quarter admitted icy water which caused the boilers to explode and those explosions broke the ship in two.

The crash against the iceberg, which had been sighted at only a quarter of a mile, came almost simultaneously with the click of the levers operated from the bridge, which stopped the engines and closed the air-tight doors. Capt. Smith was on the bridge a moment later. He summoned all on board to put on life preservers and ordered the lifeboats lowered. The first boat had more male passengers, as they were the first to reach the deck.

When the rush of frightened men and women and crying children to the decks began, the "women first" rule was rigidly enforced. Officers drew revolvers, but in most cases there was no use for them.

Revolver shots heard shortly before the Titanic went down caused many rumors, one that Capt. Smith had shot himself, another that First Officer Murdock had ended his life, but members of the crew discredit these reports.

Capt. Smith was last seen on the bridge just before the ship sank, leaping only after the decks had been washed by waves.

It is stated positively the ship's string band gathered in the saloon near the end and played "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Died With Her Husband.

Mrs. Isidor Straus refused to leave her husband's side, and both perished together.

Harold Cotton, the marine operator of the Carpathia, did not go to bed at his usual time Sunday night, and as a result caught the first message of the Titanic's plight. He had been relaying messages to the Titanic on Sunday night, and shortly after 11 o'clock bade the Titanic good night. Just as he was about to take the receiver off his head, the "C. Q. D." call sounded. This was followed by the words, "We've hit something. Come at once."

Cotton communicated with the Carpathia's officers and her course was at once changed in the direction of the Titanic at full speed of eighteen knots for the full distance of sixty miles intervening between the two ships. Before Cotton could make reply to the C. Q. D. the Titanic added, "I'm afraid we are gone."

Cotton sent word of the coming of the Carpathia. No further communication was had with the doomed ship.

Speed Never Slackened.

The Titanic's speed of twenty-three knots an hour was never slackened, and she was going at that speed when struck.

J. V. Silverthorne of St. Louis was one of the three or four saloon passengers on the Titanic who saw the deadly iceberg just after the collision.

"I was in the smoking room, reading, near a bridge whist game at one of the tables.

"When the crash came I said, 'We've hit something,' and went out on the starboard side to look. None of us was alarmed. It occurred to me that we might have bumped some small craft.

"I went back in the smoking room with the others, one of the bridge players had not left the smoking room at all, and was waiting impatiently for the others to come back and resume the game. They returned and took up their hands, and we were all about to settle down when an officer ordered us on deck and told us to get into the boats.

"There not being enough women on deck to fill the first boats, we did not like the idea of leaving the ship then, but did as we were told. Had we been in our rooms we would have had to stand aside as other men did later."

Statements by Mr. Hurd.

The Morning World today publishes Mr. Hurd's story in detail. In addition to the foregoing, Mr. Hurd says in part:

"Facts which I have established by inquiries on the Carpathia as positively as they could be established in view of the silence of the few surviving officers, are:

"That the Titanic's officers knew, several hours before the crash, of the possible nearness of the icebergs.

"That the Titanic's speed, nearly twenty-three knots an hour, was not slackened.

"That the number of lifeboats on the Titanic was insufficient to accommodate more than a third of the passengers, to say nothing of the crew. Most members of the crew say there was sixteen lifeboats and two collapsibles; none say there were more than twenty lifeboats in all. The 700 who escaped filled most of the sixteen lifeboats and the one collapsible which got away, to the limit of their capacity.

"The Impossible Happened."

"Had the ship struck the iceberg head on at whatever speed, and with whatever resulting shock, the bulkhead system of watertight compartments would probably have saved the vessel. As one man expressed it, it was the impossible that happened, when, with a shock, unbelievably light, the ship's side was torn for a length which made the bulkhead system ineffective.

"The Titanic was 1,799 miles from Queenstown and 1,191 miles from New York, speeding for a maiden voyage record. The night was star-light, the sea glossy. Lights were out in most of the state rooms, and only two or three congenial groups remained in the public rooms.

"In the crow's nest, or lookout, and on the bridge, officers and members of the crew were at their places, awaiting relief at midnight from their two hours' watch.

"At 11:45 came the sudden sound of two guns—a warning of immediate danger.

"The crash against the iceberg, which had been sighted at only a quarter of a mile, came almost simultaneously with the click of the levers operated by those on the bridge, which stopped the engines and closed the watertight doors.

Captain on the Bridge.

"Capt. Smith was on the bridge a moment later, giving orders for the summoning of all on board and for the putting on of life preservers and the lowering of the life boats.

"The first boats lowered contained more men passengers than the latter ones, as the men were on deck first, and not enough women were there to fill them.

"Members of the crew discredit all reports of suicide and say Capt. Smith remained on the bridge until, just before the ship sank, leaping only after those on the deck had been washed away. So related unat, when a cook later sought to pull him aboard a life boat, he exclaimed, 'Let me go,' and jerking away, went down.

Bodies on the Surface.

"What became of the men with life preservers is a question asked since the disaster by many persons. Dead bodies floated on the surface as the last boats moved away.

"To relate that the ship's string band gathered in the saloon near the end and played 'Nearer, My God, to Thee' sounds like an attempt to give an added solemn color to the scene which was in itself the climax of solemnity. But various passengers and survivors of the crew agree in the declaration that they heard the music;

"So, by my woes I'll be
"Nearer my God to thee
"Nearer, to thee."

"In the loading of the first boat restrictions of sex were not made, and it seemed to the men who filled in beside the women that there would be boats enough for all. But the ship's officers knew better than this, and as the spreading fear caused an advance toward the suspended craft, the order 'women first' was heard and the men were pushed aside.

Adjectives Fall Short.

"To the scene of the next two hours on those decks and in the water below, such adjectives as 'dramatic,' and 'tragic,' do but poor justice.

"With the knowledge of deadly peril gaining greater power each moment over those men and women, the courage of the greater part of the men, both among cabin passengers, officers, crew and steerage, asserted itself."

Isidor Strauss, supporting his wife on her way to a life boat was held back by an inexorable guard. Another officer strove to help her to a sent of safey, but she brushed away his arm and clung to her husband, crying "I will not go without you."

Another woman took her place and Mrs. Straus, clinging to her husband, became part of a picture now drawn indelibdy in many minds.

Col. Astor's Farewell.

Col. Astor, holding his young wife's arm stood decorously aside as the officers spoke to him, and Mrs. Astor and her maid were ushered to seats. Mrs. Henry B. Harris parted in like manner from her husband, and saw him last at the rail, beside Col. Astor.

Walter M. Clark of Los Angeles, Nephew of the Montana senator, joined the line of men as his young wife, sobbing, was placed in one of the boats.

"Let him come. There is room" cried Mrs. Emil Taussig as the men of the White Star motioned to her husband to leave her. It was with difficulty that he released her hold to permit her to be led to her place.

George D. Widener, who had been in Capt. Smith's company a few moments after the crash, was another whose wife was parted from him and lowered, a moment later, to the surface of the calm sea.

Maj. Butt Not Seen.

Of Maj. Archibald Butt, a favorite with his fellow tourists; of Charles M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk; of Benjamin Guggenheim, or of William T. Stead, no one seems to know whether they stayed too long in their staterooms or whether they forebore to approach the fast filling boats; none of them was in the throng which reached the Carpathia.

Some of the boats, crowded too full drifted for a time. None had provisions or water and there was a lack of clothing.

As the end of the Titanic became manifestly but a matter of moments, the oarsmen pulled their boats away and the chilling water began to echo splash after splash as passengers and sailors in life preservers leaped over and started swimming away to escape the expected suction.

Only the hardiest constitution could endure for more than a few moments such a numbing bath. The first vigorous strokes gave way to heart-breaking cries of 'help, help' and stiffened forms were seen floating relaxed in death.

One Boat Overturned.

The last of the boats, a collapsible, was launched too late to get away and was overturned by the ship sinking.

As the crews in the water multiplied, another sound was heard, strong and clear at first, then fainter in the distance. It was the melody of the hymn "Nearer My God to Thee," played by the string orchestra in the dining saloon. Some of those in the water started to sing the words, but grew silent as they realized that, for the men who played, the music was a sacrament to be consumed by death. The strains of the hymn and the frantic cries of the dying blended in a symphony of sorrow.

Led by the green light, the boats drew away and the bow, then the quarter, then the decks, and last the stern of the marvelous ship of a few days before passed beneath the waters. The great force of the ship's sinking was unaided by any violence of the elements, and the suction, not so great as had been feared, rocked but mildly the group of boats now a quarter of a mile distant from it.

STATEMENT BY COMMITTEE OF SURVIVORS FROM TITANIC

New York, April 19.—The following statement issued by a committee of the surviving passengers of the Titanic was given to the press on the arrival of the Carpathia:

"We, the undersigned surviving passengers from the steamship Titanic, in order to forstall any exaggerated statements, deem it our duty to give to the press a statement of facts which have come to our knowledge and which we believe to be true.

"On Sunday, April 14, 1912, at about 11:40 p. m. on a cold, star-light night in a smooth sea and with no moon, the ship struck an iceberg which had been reported to the bridge by lookouts, but not early enough to avoid collision. Steps were taken to ascertain the damage and save passengers and ship. Orders were given to put on life belts, and the boats were lowered.

"The ship sank at about 2:20 a. m. Monday and the usual distress signals were sent out by wireless and rockets at intervals from the ship.

"Fortunately the wireless message was received by the Cunarder Carpathia at about 12 o'clock midnight and she arrived on the scene of the disaster about 4 a. m. Monday. The officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia had been preparing all night for the rescue and comfort of the survivors, and the last mentioned were received on board with the most touching care and kindness, every attention being given, irrespective of class.

"The passengers, officers and crew gave up gladly their staterooms, clothing and comforts for our benefits. All honor to them.

Blames English Rule.

"The English board of trade passengers' certificate on board the Titanic showed approximately 3,500. The same certificate called for lifeboat accommodations for approximately 950 in fourteen large lifeboats, two smaller boats and four collapsible boats.

"Life preservers were accessible and apparently in sufficient number for all on board.

"The approximate number of passengers carried at the time of collision was:

"First-class, 330.
"Second-class, 320.
"Third-class, 750.
"Total, 1,400.
"Officers and crew, 940.
"Total, 2,340.

"Of the foregoing about the following were rescued by the steamship Carpathia:

"First-class, 210; second-class, 125; third-class, 200; officers, 4; seamen, 39; stewards, 96; firemen, 71; total, 210 of the crew.

"The total about 745 saved, was about 80 per cent of the maximum capacity of the lifeboats.

Inadequate Lifesaving Provision.

"We feel it our duty to call the attention of the public to what we consider the inadequate supply of lifesaving applicances provided for on modern passenger steamships, and recommend that immediate steps be taken to compel passenger steamers to carry sufficient boats to accommodate the maximum number of people carried on board. The following facts were observed and should be considered in this connection:

"The insufficiency of lifeboats, rafts, etc.; lack of trained seamen to man same (stokers, stewards, etc., are not efficient boat handlers); not enough officers to carry out emergency orders on the bridge and superintend the launching and control of lifeboats; absence of searchlights.

"The board of trade rules allow for entirely too many people in each boat to permit the same to be properly handled. On the Titanic the boat deck was about seventy-five feet above water and consequently passengers were required to embark before lowering boats, thus, endangering the operation and preventing the taking on of the maximum number the boats would hold. Boats at all times to be properly equipped with provisions, water, lamps, compasses, lights, etc.

"Lifesaving boat drills should be more frequent and thoroughly carried out; and officers should be armed at boat drills. Great reduction in speed in fog and ice as damage if collision actually occurs is liable to be less.

"In conclusion, we suggest that an international conference be called to recommend the passage of identical laws providing for the safety of all at sea and we urge the United States government to take the initiative as soon as possible."

MOST MEN TAKEN FROM WATER, WOMAN SAYS.

New York, April 19.—Mrs. Churchill Candee of Washington, D. C., was taken from the Carpathia with both her legs broken. She was hurried in an ambulance to a hospital. Mrs. Candee said she received her injuries while getting into a lifeboat. Most of the men saved, she declared, were picked up from the water, having plunged overboard after the lifeboats had been launched from the Titanic.

"Maj. Archibald Butt and Col. John Jacob Astor died like heroes," she said, but before she could tell more of the story of their end she was hurried away.

"ARCHIE WAS A SOLDIER," SAYS PRESIDENT TAFT.

Washington, April 19.—President Taft told visitors that he had never expected to hear of the rescue of Maj. Butt, his military alde, after the first shocking news of the Titanic disaster reached land.

"I never had any idea that Archie was saved at all," said the president. "As soon as I heard that 1,200 people went down I knew he went down too. He was a soldier and was on deck where he belonged."

BEDLAM ON CARPATHIA

Steward of Rescue Ship Tells of Reception of Titanic's Survivors.

Says Women Became Frantic When Hope of Others Was Lost.

New York, April 19.—A steward from the Carpathia told the story of the rescue of the Titanic's passengers and crew to a greatly interested group of his mates.

"It was between a quarter after and half after 1 o'clock, ship's time, Monday morning," he said," when all the stewards were mustered and Chief Steward Hughes told us that a wireless had just come in that the Titanic had hit an iceberg and probably would need help. He urged us to turn right in and get things ready for a ship's load of people. The Carpathia turned in the direction the wireless had called from.

"We got hot coffee ready and laid out blankets and made sandwiches and everything like that. Capt. Rostrum shut off the hot water all over the ship and turned every ounce of heat into steam and the old boat was as excited as any of us.

Glorious, Bitter Cold Morning.

"After we get things ready we went out on deck. It was a glorious morning, no swell in the sea, but bitter cold. The ship's lights were on full blaze and we were there in the middle of a sea of ice—the finest sight I ever saw.

"Just as it was about half day and dark we came upon a boat. There were eighteen men in it and it was in charge of an officer. There were no women in the boat, and it was not more than one-third filled. All of the men were able to come up the Jacob's ladder on the Carpathia, which we threw over the port side. Every one of them was given a hooker of brandy or as much of black coffee as he wanted. After they were all on board we pulled up their boat.

Boats All Around.

"It was bright morning by now, and all around the Carpathia, here and there, about a quarter-mile apart, were more boats. These were nearer full than the first and there were women in all of them. The women were hoisted up in bosuns chairs and the men who could do so climbed the Jacob's ladder. Some of the men, however, had to be hauled up, especially the firemen. There was a whole watch of firemen saved. They were nearly naked. They had jumped overboard and swam after the boats, it turned out, and they were almost frozen stiff.

"The women were dressed, and the funny thing about it is only five of them had to be taken to the hospital. Both the men's hospitals were filled—twenty-four beds in all. We got twelve boatloads, I think, inside of a little more than an hour. Then between quarter after and half after eight we got the last two boats, crowded to the guards and almost all women.

Saw Much Wreckage.

"After we got the last boatload aboard, the Californian came alongside and the captains arranged that we should make straight for New York and the Californian would look around for more boats. We circled around and around, though, and we saw all kinds of wreckage. There was not a soul on a stick of it, and we didn't get sight of another soul.

"While we were picking up the boats the women we saved were quiet enough and not making any trouble at all. But when it seemed sure we would not find any more persons alive, then bedlam came. I hope I never go through it again. The way those women took on for the folks they had lost was awful, and we could not do anything to quiet them until they cried themselves out.

"There were five Chinese in the boats, and not a soul knew where they came from. No one saw them get into the boats, but there they were, wherever they came from.

Confident She Would Float.

"The fellows from the crew of the Titanic told us that lots more men could have got away, only no one would believe their boat would sink. Why, one waiter who was saved told me he was in a card game with five more, and some one put his head in the door and shouted that the ship was sinking. The boys jeered at him and kept on playing. The man who told me got away. The rest of the boys are out there yet.

"And they said also that more women could have been saved, only they wouldn't go without their husbands. The officers pulled some of them apart —the women from the men—and shoved the women into the boats, telling them they wanted all the women together and all the men together. And even then they could not get the half of them to go.

"A woman passenger told me that one beautiful old lady put her arms around her husband's neck, and neither the officers nor her husband could get her arms loose. And neither one of them was saved."

SAYS DISCIPLINE WAS WONDERFUL

Philadelphian Who Jumped Overboard Tells of Wreck of Titanic.

New York, April 19.—E. Z. Taylor of Philadelphia, one of the survivors, was impressed by the behavior of the crew. "It seems to me" said Mr. Taylor, "that the discipline on board was wonderful.

He gave a graphic description of his own experiences.

"After I had given up hope for my own life and had seen boat-load after boatload of women and children taken away," he said, "I thought I would take a chance, and I jumped into the sea.

"I think I must have been picked up within a few minutes. I was unconscious for some time, not regaining my senses until about 1 o'clock in the morning, when I saw the Titanic blow up. The boat seemed to break in two in the middle as the result of an awful explosion. The noise was terrific.

"The night was clear and starlit. In my boat were about twenty people. The Carpathia picked us up about 3 o'clock in the morning."

Swam Twenty Minutes.

B. W. Beano, a second cabin passenger, was picked up after swimming in the icy water for twenty minutes. He, too, jumped into the sea, after the boats were lowered.

"I heard a shot fired," said Beane, "just before I jumped. Afterward I was told a steerage passenger had been shot while trying to leap into a lifeboat filled with women and children."

Compensation Bill May 2.

Washington, April 19.—The senate has agreed to vote on the workmen's compensation bill May 2. Senator Overman of North Carolina gave notice of a motion to postpone until next December.

BRIDE FINDS SHE IS WIDOW

Learns of Husband's Death Only on Landing in New York.

"He Knocked Men Down to Save Me," She Says in Telling Story.

New York, April 19. — Among the first passengers off the Carpathia was Mrs. Paul Schabert of Derby, Conn. She said that she had a stateroom on the port side and had sailed with her brother, Phillip. Mrs. Schabert declared that her brother was saved because she refused to leave him.

"It was a terrible experience," Mrs. Schabert added. "I was awakened by the shock of the collision and went on deck. There was very little excitement, and persons were coming from their rooms asking what had happened. Suddenly from the bridge came the cry, 'ladies first.' This was the first inkling we had that the ship was in danger. I went back to my stateroom and dressed, and then as I returned to the deck I heard the horrifying order that women must leave their husbands and brothers. I refused to leave my brother, and finally he was shoved into the boat with me."

Bride Finds Herself Widow.

Mrs. D. W. Marven of this city, who was on a honeymoon trip with her husband, was almost prostrated when she reached the dock and learned that her husband had not been picked up by some other boat.

"My God, don't ask me too much," she said. "Tell me, have you any news from Dan? He grabbed me in his arms and knocked men down to get me into the boat. As I was put into the boat he cried: 'It's all right, little girl, you go and I'll stay awhile. I'll put on a life preserver and jump off and follow your boat.' As our boat shoved off he threw a kiss at me and that is the last I saw of him."

Edward Beane of Glasgow, Scotland, who with his wife occupied a stateroom in the second cabin, declared that fifteen minutes after the Titanic hit the iceberg there was an explosion in the engine room, which was followed in a few minutes by a second explosion.

"The stern of the boat floated for nearly an hour after the bow was submerged," said Mr. Beane, "and then went down. I heard a report that two steerage passengers were shot by the officers when they started to crowd into the boats, but later this was denied."

Very Little Pushing.

Max Frohlicher-Stehli, who, with his wife and daughter, was on the way to visit a brother in this city, said:

"My wife and two women entered one of the first boats lowered. Twelve men, including myself, were standing nearby, and as there were no other women passengers waiting we were ordered to get in. The sea was calm. We were rowed by four seamen, one of whom was in charge.

"The order maintained on the Titanic was what I would call remarkable. There was very little pushing, and in most cases it was the women who caused the commotion by insisting that their husbands go with them into the life boats. As a rule the men were very orderly. It was not until we had left the ship that many of the women showed fright. From that time on, however, they filled the air with shrieks."

ISMAY WILL FACE INQUIRY

President of Merchant Marine Promises to Meet Senators.

Says Titanic "Was the Last Word in Shipbuilding."

New York, April 19.—J. Bruce Ismay was interviewed last night by Senators Smith and Newlands, and promised to testify at a hearing by the senate committee to investigate the Titanic horror. The hearing will be held at the Waldorf in this city.

Mr. Ismay, who is chairman of the International Merchant Marine company, gave out the following prepared statement:

"In the presence and under the shadows of a catastrophe so overwhelming, my feelings are too deep for expression in words and I can say that the White Star line officers and employes will do everything humanly possible to alleviate the suffering and sorrow of the relatives and friends of those who perished.

"The Titanic was the last word in shipbuilding. Every regulation prescribed by he British Board of Trade had been strictly compiled with. The master, officers and crew were the most experienced and skillful in the British service.

Welcomes Senate Inquiry.

"I am informed that a committee of the United States senate has been appointed to investigate the circumstances of the accident. I heartily welcome the most complete and exhaustive inquiry, and any aid that I or my associates or our builders or navigators can render is at the service of the public and the governments of both the United States and Great Britain. Under these circumstances I must defer making any further statement at this hour."

Mr. Ismay said informally before giving out his statement that he left the ship in the last boat, one of the collapsible boats on the starboard side.

"I do not know the speed at which the Titanic was going," said Mr. Ismay in reply to a question. "She hit the iceberg a glancing blow."

TELLS ABOUT THE RESCUE

Passenger on the Carpathia Describes Transfer of the Passengers.

Tells of Parted Families and Deaths After Peril Was Over.

New York, April 19.—A passenger on the Carpathia made the following statement:

"I was awakened at about half past 12 at night by a commotion on the decks which seemed unusual, but there was no excitement. As the boat was moving I paid little attention to it, and went to sleep again. About 3 o'clock I was again awakened. I noticed the boat had stopped. I went to the deck. The Carpathia had changed her course. Lifeboats were sighted and began to arrive, and soon, one by one, they came up to our side. There were sixteen in all and the scene of the transferring of the passengers was most pitiable.

Some Boats Not Half Full.

"The adults were assisted in climbing the rope ladders by ropes adjusted to their waists. The little children and babies were hoisted to the deck in bags. Some of the boats were crowded, a few were not half full. This I could not understand. Some people were in full evening dress. Others were in their night clothing and were wrapped in blankets.

"The immigrants were in all sorts of clothes. They were hurried into the saloon indiscriminately for a hot breakfast. They had been in the open boats four and five hours in the most biting air I ever experienced.

"There were husbands without wives, wives without husbands, parents without children, children without parents. But there was no demonstration. No sobs—scarcely a word spoken. They seemed to be stunned.

"Immediately after breakfast divine service was held in the saloon.

"One woman died in a lifeboat, three others died soon after reaching our decks. Their bodies were buried in the sea at 5 o'clock that afternoon. None of the rescued had any clothing except what they had on and a relief committee was formed and our passengers contributed enough for their immediate needs.

When the Titanic Sank.

"When her lifeboats pushed away from the Titanic the steamer was brilliantly lighted, the band was playing and the captain was standing on the bridge giving directions. The boat was well submerged and the keel rose high above the water. Suddenly the boat seemed to break in two. Then the next moment everything disappeared. The survivors were so close to the sinking steamer that they feared the lifeboats would be drawn into the vortex.

"There were preparations going on for a brilliant party to be given on board the next evening.

"On our way back to New York we steamed along the edge of a field of ice which seemed limitless. As far as the eye could see to the north there was no blue water. At one time I counted thirteen icebergs."

SAW CAPTAIN SMITH SWEPT INTO SEA

Rescued Passenger of Titanic Tells of the Officer's Death.

New York, April 19.—Miss Elizabeth Allen of St. Louis, accompanied by Mrs. Edward Roberts and Miss E. A. Marshall, also of that city, was one of the rescued women passengers on the Titanic.

"The first crash" said Miss Allen "came at 11:40 p. m. I am sure of the time. Although there was plenty of excitement there was no panic. The passengers and officers behaved admirably. I was in a lifeboat for several hours and it was with great regreat that I saw the Titanic go down."

George A. Braden, (on the passenger list George Brayton) told of how Capt. Smith met his death.

"I saw Capt. Smith while I was on the water. He was standing on the deck all alone. All at once he was swept by a wave, but managed to get his feet. Then, as the boat sank, he again was knocked down by a wave and this time disappeared from view."

SURVIVORS ON CARPATHIA.

Boston, Mass., April 19.—A message to the Associated Press from Capt. Lord of the Californian of the Leyland line says:

"Arrived scene Titanic disaster 8:30 a. m. 15th. All survivors then aboard Carpathia. Have not and did not see any bodies. LORD, Captain."

Liner Carries 1,900.

GOING UNDER FULL POWER

Man Who Was Steering Titanic When She Struck Tells Story.

Horror of the Actual Sinking Is Related By Passengers.

New York, April 19.—Accounts vary as to the extent of the disorder on board the Titanic. Not only was the Titanic tearing through the April night to her doom with every ounce of steam crowded on, but she was under orders from the general officers of the line to make all the speed of which she was capable. This was the statement made by J. H. Moody, a quartermaster of the vessel and helmsman on the night of the disaster. He said the ship was making twenty-one knots an hour and the officers were striving to live up to the orders to smash the record.

"It was close to midnight," said Moody, "and I was on the bridge with the second officer, who was in command. Suddenly he shouted 'port your helm.' I did so, but it was too late. We struck the submerged portion of the berg."

Many Declined to Leave.

Of the many accounts given by the passengers, most of them agreed that the shock when the Titanic struck, although ripping her great sides like a giant can opener, did not greatly jar the entire vessel, for the blow was a glancing one. The accounts also agree substantially that when the passengers were taken off on the life boats there was no serious panic and that many wished "to remain on board the Titanic, believing her to be unsinkable."

The most distressing stories are those giving the experiences of the passengers in life boats. These tell not only of their own suffering but give the harrowing details of how they saw the great hulk of the Titanic stand end uppermost for many minutes before plunging to the bottom. As this awful spectacle was witnessed by the survivors in the boats they plainly saw many of those whom they had left behind leaping from the decks into the water.

PASSENGER SAYS HE SAW ICEBERG

Monster Seemed to Be About One Mile Away, He Declares.

New York, April 19.—H. B. Steffanson of New York, another survivor who leaped into the sea and was picked up, declared that he say the iceberg before the collision.

"It seemed to me that the berg was a mile away, and I should say it was about eighty feet out of the water. The ice that showed clear of the water was not what we struck. After the collision I saw ice all over the sea.

"When we hit the berg we seemed to slide upon it. I could feel the boat jumping and pounding and I realized that we were on the ice, but I thought we could weather it.

"I only saw the captain once after the collision. He was telling the men to get the women and children into the boats."

Mrs. Cornelia Andrews of Hudson, N. Y., was one of the first to be put into a lifeboat.

"I saw the Titanic sink," she said. "I saw her blow up.

"Our little boat was a mile away when the end came, but the night was clear and the ship showed up clearly even at that distance. As our boat put off I saw Mr. and Mrs. Astor standing on the deck. As we pulled away they waved their hands and smiled at us. We were in this open boat about four hours before we were picked up."

LINER DELAYED SO THAT GIRL CAN MEET LOVER.

San Francisco, April 19.—Aided by a girl and a taxicab, Cupid delayed the departure of the Nippon Maru ten minutes. The manager of the line ordered the vessel held after a man rushed to the bridge announcing that Miss Clarice Cole of Houston, Tex., was coming in a taxicab to take the vessel for Hongkong, where she was to be married. Miss Cole did not reveal the name of her fiance, who is believed to be an army officer in the Philippines.

NERVOUS PEOPLE MUST CURE THEMSELVES

The First Step Is to Stop the Cause of the Trouble, Then Build Up the Strength of the Disordered Nerves.

The first thing to do in nervous debility is to stop the cause of the trouble, if possible, whether it is irregular living, worry, or whatever it may be. Then the nerves must be given special nourishment and the blood must be kept pure and rich. This is the mission of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and this is why the pills have been used with such great success in nervous troubles that did not yield to ordinary methods of treatment.

Nervous exhaustion early shows itself in the decreased activity of the organs that normally cast out the waste products of the body. The kidney, skin and bowels are deprived of some of their energy and a part of the poisonous waste materials, which they readily pass off during health are turned back into the blood.

The result is plain. The blood, filled with impurities, is unable to give even its usual amount of nourishment to the nerves and a general breakdown follows. This is the explanation of the depressed and irritable feeling, pallor, loss of spirits, headaches, shortness of breath and poor digestion of the nervous sufferer.

The tonic treatment for nervous troubles, by building up the blood and supplying it with added oxygen, burns up and casts off the impurities and gives to the nerves the elements they need. In no other way can these elements be conveyed to the nerves except through the blood.

Mr. George B. Fox, of No. 416 Seyburn avenue, Detroit Mich., says:

"I am glad to acknowledge what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People did for me. Through overwork I became a sufferer from nervous prostration and, although I was under the doctor's care, I was sick for five years. I was very nervous and had frequent headaches—almost daily. I was dizzy-headed and saw rings and specks floating around in the air. I never slept well. My appetite was poor and I lost twenty pounds in weight. I was troubled with constipation. I had a bad cough and was examined for tuberculosis by two specialists. They told me that my lungs were sound but that I was a nervous wreck. A friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and a short trial convinced me that they were doing me good, so I continued using them and was restored to good health again. I keep the pills in the house now and if any of the family are in need of a tonic I give them Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I can highly recommend them to the public and have done so to a good many shopmates who have been benefited by them."

Those who are interested in the treatment which cured this case can obtain further information by writing for the booklet, "Nervous Disorders," which we send free on request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are also recommended for sick headache, sleeplessness, nervous exhaustion, nervous dyspepsia, neuralgia, sciatica, St. Vitus' dance and locomotor ataxia. They are guaranteed to be free from opiates or harmful drugs.

They are for sale by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Madam Q.: You are suffering from a disease which is quite common and which if neglected causes a drain on the health which leads to more serious ills. By using the following as a douche or injection with syringe you can soon cure the disease and stop the discharge. Mix 2 ozs. of antiseptic vilane powder and 1 oz. of tannic acid and use a teaspoonful to a quart of warm water.

"Maud" writes: "Can anything be done for an itching scalp. My scalp is also covered with dandruff and I am in great distress."

Answer: You can very easily be cured of an itching scalp, also dandruff if you will get a 4 oz. jar of plain yellow minyol and use according to the directions given on the jar. Two or three applications have been known to cure. Try it fairly and you will advocate its use to your friends.

"Ellen K." writes: "I am not fleshy enough. I should weight 20 pounds more. I am ashamed of my thinness and wish to become plump and attractive. Can you help me?"

Answer: Yes, I can help you "Ellen K." and many others in the same plight. A thorough course of treatment with three grain hypo-nuclane tablets will gradually give you more red and white blood corpuscles adding to your weight, health and color, giving you pink cheeks, red lips and sparkling eyes. These tablets are packed in sealed cartons with directions. Do not expect results too quickly. It takes time to change the cells and tissues of the body, but you can depend on gaining weight if you are persistent.

"D. E. F." writes: "If you know of anything that I could take to cure my rheumatism, please tell me as I suffer all the time. Am getting worse all the time."

Answer: Take the following and you will soon be cured of your rheumatism. This is the best remedy that I have ever known for this trouble. Iodide of potassium, 2 drams; sodium salicylate, 4 drams; wine of colchicum, ½ oz.; comp. essence cardiol, 1 oz.; comp. fluid balmwort, 1 oz., and syrup sarsaparilla comp, 5 ozs. Mix by shaking well and take one teaspoonful at meal times and again at bed time.

"Helen" writes: "Can you give me a reliable remedy for coughs and colds? My cough is so tight that I am afraid of pneumonia."

Answer: The tightest cough can be loosened in one hour by using the following: Get from your druggist a 2½ oz. package of essence mentho-laxene and make according to directions on bottle. This will break up any cold and loosen the tightest cough and soon cure by its laxative tonic action.

"Henry" writes: "If you can prescribe anything that will cure my stomach trouble and constipation, please do so. My breath is bad and I am irritable and cannot sleep."

Answer: You can be very easily cured of your troubles by taking tablets triopeptine. This is the most scientific and satisfactory treatment for the stomach and if taken according to directions you will soon be able to eat a hearty meal and not have any distress afterwards. Your constipation will be cured and your whole system will be put in a fine condition.

"John" says: "What can I do to gain an appetite? I do not eat and am getting thin and weak. Please advise a remedy."

Answer: The best tonic that I know of is made by mixing 5 ozs. of syrup of hypophosphites comp. and 1 oz. tincture cadomene comp. Mix by shaking well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful before each meal. You will soon gain flesh and your appetite will return.

"A. L. T." writes: "I am constantly embarrassed by my excessive weight. I have tried exercise and diet but they do not help. If you know of some harmless and effective medicine please publish."

Answer: To reduce your weight get 5 ozs. of aromatic elixir and 1 oz. of glycol arbolene. Get these two ingredients separately to avoid any substitution. Mix and take a teaspoonful for three days after each meal, then take two teaspoonfuls. This is a perfectly harmless and sure remedy for obesity. Many women have written that they reduced their weight a pound a day after the first week.

"Geraldine" writes: "I am troubled a great deal with headache, dizzy spells, dark spots before my eyes, twinges of rheumatism. Can I be helped at all?"

Answer: You can not only be "helped" but you can be "cured" of all the troubles you mention. You need three grain sulpherb tablets (not sulphur) which are packed in sealed tubes and contain full directions for use. They are made of sulphur, cream of tartar and herb medicines. If these are taken regularly they purify the blood, stimulate the liver and bowels into healthy action and will gradually effect a cure.

"Mother"—Bedwetting in children is usually a disease which can be cured by the use of the following: Tincture cubebs, 1 dram; tincture rhus aromatic, 2 drams; comp. fluid balmwort, 1 oz. Mix and give the child 10 to 15 drops in water one hour before each meal.

The MARK of QUALITY

ON THE IRON RANGES

WOULD RECALL SIX ALDERMEN

Virginia Progressive League to Continue Warfare Against the Councilmen.

Virginia, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—The Progressive league voted unanimously to continue the recall proceedings instituted against six aldermen. It is sought to recall the six aldermen who voted to elect Mr. Shea city attorney, after his appointment had been vetoed by Mayor M. A. Murphy. It is claimed the resignation of Mr. Shea does not restore the confidence that the aldermen will carry out the will of the people as expressed at the last election, on the water and light plant ownership question. Six petitions on the recall have been filed. The aldermen named are Michael Boylan, president; A. D. Heritage, L. A. Peterson, Frank Weber, J. L. Kimball, and Alfred Staff.

City Clerk Must Verify.

The city clerk is required to verify the names on these petitions and to certify the correctness or incorrectness to the city council within ten days.

The league authorized the president to appoint a committee at large of three and two members from each ward in the city to manage the election. It was asserted that the new candidates who shall be named, shall not necessarily be members of the Progressive league, nor of any particular element or party, the only requirement being that they represent and carry out the will of the people. All of the aldermen sought to be recalled will be candidates again without filing, unless they make a specific statement by letter that they do not wish to stand for election again.

The recall of Mayor Murphy is threatened, but his supporters say he was elected by a 70 per cent vote in February and would be returned by a 90 per cent vote now.

PARK AND LIBRARY SITE IS FAVORED

Expect Eveleth Council to Choose Location Having Double Purpose.

Eveleth, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—The city council at a meeting tonight is expected to select a site for the new public library toward which $15,000 has been offered by Andrew Carnegie. The members of the council, together with the library board, yesterday were looking over the several sites offered for the purpose. Four sites are under consideration, viz.: corner of Jackson street and Adams avenue, consisting of 100x125 feet, owned by A. P. Goss and priced at $8,000; corner of Jackson street and Adams avenue, 125x125 feet, owned by Max Shapiro, at $14,500; 100x125 feet on Grant avenue adjoining the Moore hospital, owned by Dr. Moore, Max Shapiro, M. Feldman and Peter Junke, at $13,500; 125x125 feet, corner Pierce street and B avenue, owned by Joseph Baldi, Cora and Beatrice Williams and Mary Skramstad, $7,500, and a tract consisting of something over a block, bounded by Chandler avenue, Pierce street, McKinley avenue and Fayal road, which is offered by James A. Robb and others and which is intended to serve as a park as well as a library site, at $25,000.

Each Site Advocated.

Each of the several sites has its advocates, some of whom are personally interested, but with the public in general the tract proposed for a park as well as a library sites is the most favored.

This tract lies in the center of the best residence section and only two blocks from the main street, it is practically unimproved at present and is an admirable location for a park.

MORE SCHOOL ROOM NEEDED

Chisholm School Board Finds Itself Handicapped By Lack of Space.

Chisholm, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—The board of education has chosen teachers for the ensuing year and discussed matters in relation to making provisions for the increasing school population. Some of the lower grades are occupying a store building on Birch street and the board may find it necessary to have another school building erected for the increased numbers.

The burning of the Central school at the beginning of the winter term seriously handicapped school facilities and many classes have been crowded into the high and Lincoln school buildings in addition to occupying store buildings to care for the overflow. The board will have to make preparations for additional room to care for the school population for the coming year, as the new Lincoln school, located in the northern section of the city, will be filled to its capacity.

The board does not intend to go ahead with these plans unless there appears a public demand for the erection of another building, but the need for it has become so apparent that the board will likely have plans submitted and seek the approval of the public by pointing out the inadequacy of the present school facilities and the increasing school population of the coming year.

Will Secure Plans.

To make temporary provision of adequate room for next September the board will secure plans and specifications and prices for four portable schoolrooms from the American Portable House company of Seattle. The present high school building occupies a block in the south central portion of the city, and in the event of the construction of a new building or of an addition it is likely that the west half of these grounds will be used. The matter of the transfer of the Glen school came up at the meeting at which Mr. Blair, superintendent of the Hibbing schools, was present. The local board has made no effort to have the Glen added to this district, although it is located within the city limits and the pupils of the upper grades and high school attend the schools here.

The following teachers were re-elected:

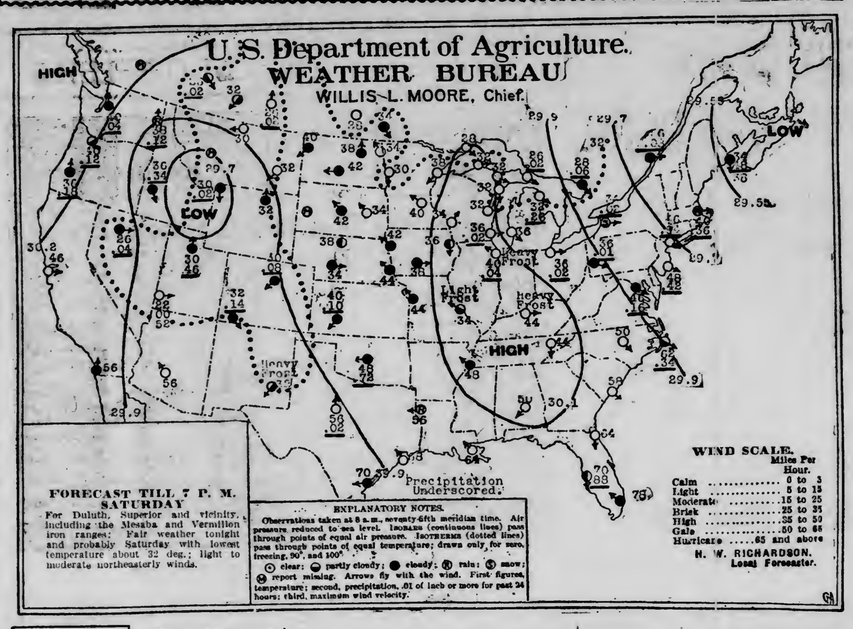
COFFEE HURTS One in Three.

It is difficult to make people believe that tea and coffee are a poison to at least one person out of every three, but people are slowly finding it out, although thousands of them suffer terribly before they discover the fact.

A New York hotel man says: "Each time after drinking coffee I became restless, nervous and excited, so that I was unable to sit five minutes in one place, was also inclined to vomit and suffered from loss of sleep, which got worse and worse.



"A lady said that perhaps coffee was the cause of my trouble, and suggested that I try Postum. I laughed at the thought that coffee hurt me, but she insisted so hard that I finally had some Postum made. I have been using it in place of coffee ever since, for I noticed that all my former nervousness and irritation disappeared. I began to sleep perfectly, and the Postum tasted as good or better than the old coffee, so what was the use of sticking to a beverage that was injuring me?

"One day on an excursion up the country I remarked to a young lady friend on her greatly improved appearance. She explained that some time before she had quit using coffee and taken Postum. She had gained a number of pounds and her former palpitation of the heart, humming in the ears, trembling of the hands and legs and other disagreeable feelings had disappeared. She recommended me to quit coffee and take Postum and was very much surprised to find that I had already made the change.

"She said her brother had also received great benefits from leaving off coffee and taking on Postum." "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Chisholm, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—Rev. Mr. Jones of the local M. E. church will conduct a "Church of Sorrow" service at the church Sunday morning, which will be in the nature of memorial services over the foundering of the ill-fated Titanic. The choir will render special music for the services. The local lodge of Eagles will have their memorial services at the church in the evening, at which the Rev. Mr. Jones will speak.

Dwelling Is Burned.

A dwelling belonging to Theodore Drannish, residing across the Longyear lake, was entirely consumed by fire early Wednesday morning. The fire department arrived in due time, but the water mains do not extend to that section and the fire company was helpless and turned their attention towards saving nearby property. The loss, including contents, was total, and the insurance of $550 fully covers.

The St. Louis County Sunday School association will meet in Chisholm next Thursday at the M. E. church. The principal talks will be given by the Rev. Harry Harris of Biwabik on the "Adult Bible Class Work" and by Mr. Locker on "Teachers' Training." The local Sunday school is making extensive preparations for the event.

Twenty cans of lake trout for Jessie lake were sent to B. J. Sjolund, and a consignment for the waters around Warba went to Andrew Johnson and Dr. McNulty at that point. Another consignment, designated for the waters of Trout lake, was shipped to Alex Robinson and Will Nesbitt and Niles & Alton have taken fry for planting in the lakes in the immediate vicinity of Grand Rapids.

Much enthusiasm was displayed by all.

STARTING NEW ROAD.

Work Has Commenced on Highway to Goodland.

Keewatin, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—The preliminary survey on the proposed judicial road tapping Goodland and Warba was started Tuesday by a crew of men. As it was found that the state only allows $4 per day for engineers and $2 per day for axmen and chainmen it was decided by the commission at a recent meeting at Hibbing to make up the deficiency by popular subscription. As the work is estimated to take about thirty-five days to complete, the sum of $300 will be subscribed by the business men of Keewatin and Hibbing. P. A. McEachin and E. L. Cochrane have charge of the soliciting of funds in Keewatin and already has a fund of $124 suscribed.

SAGE TEA WILL DARKEN THE HAIR

Restore Faded and Gray Hair to Natural Color—Dandruff Quickly Removed.

There is nothing new about the idea of using Sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our grandmothers kept their hair dark, glossy and abundant by the use of a simple "Sage Tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance, they made a brew of Sage leaves and applied it to their hair with wonderfully beneficial effect.

Nowadays we don't have to resort to the old-time tiresome method of gathering the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves; and all we have to do is to call for the ready-made product, Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, containing Sage in the proper strength, with the addition of Sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy.

This preparation gives youthful color and beauty to the hair, and is one of the best remedies you can use for dandruff, dry, feverish, itching scalp, and falling hair. Get a fifty-cent bottle from your druggist today, and you will be surprised at the quick results. All druggists sell it, under guarantee that the money will be refunded if the remedy is not exactly as represented. Special agent, Max Wirth, 13 West Superior street.

GILBERT MINES STARTING WORK

Pettit and Schley Mines Are Employing Large Forces of Men.

Gilbert, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—It is reported that the Gilbert mine has started unwatering its No. 2 shaft preparatory to opening the property. This will mean a large increase in the number of men employed at this mine. This is a cause of much satisfaction to Gilbert citizens generally.

The Pettit and Schley mines are now working large forces and that, coupled with the prospective increase in the Gilbert mine means a prosperous summer for Gilbert.

After Stray Dogs.

Gilbert is waging war against dogs. The fact that this is the time of the year when hydrophobia is most prevalent and that several dogs have given signs of going on the warpath led the mayor to issue a muzzling order for all dogs in the village limits. Some of the dogs are now properly muzzled, some have them around their necks, and some carry them around in their mouths, as evidence of good intentions. Those found unmuzzled will be shot after being kept in pound for a limited time.

MONROE MINER HURT.

Caught By Cave-in and Is Now in Rood Hospital.

Chisholm, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—Lasso Koppa, a miner at the Monroe mine, was caught in a cave-in of dirt at the mine Wednesday evening and was brought to the hospital in an ambulance after being rescued by fellow workmen. Hasty examination revealed that he had sustained a contusion over the right lumbar region and has a fair chance for recovery.

Chris J. Burkard of the Monroe location lost some fingers this week when a cow he was leading with a rope bolted and the rope tore off the fingers.

The hand was so badly lacerated by the rope that the physician at the Rood hospital amputated the little and ring finger bone in about an inch in the hand. The big finger was the only uninjured member of the hand. The flesh about the wrist and hand was so badly lacerated that it required thirty stitches to close the wounds.

COOK COUNTY VOTES BONDS.

North Shore County Favors Duluth-Port Arthur Highway.

Two Harbors, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—Cook county will spend during the coming summer $1,000 per mile for sixty miles of road, this being the that county's share of the great north shore highway which when completed will extend from Duluth to Porth Arthur. It will run 200 miles along the north shore at heights varying from a dozen to 1,000 feet above the level of the lake.

That Cook county has taken the initiative and has already voted a bond issue of $60,000 became known in a letter from Chris Murphy of Grand Marais to F. E. Evans, secretary of the local Commercial club. The Cook county people have been working for some time on the bond issue and are elated at having at length voted it. The work is to be commenced at the earliest possible time and will be rushed to completion.

John Stone Pardee of Duluth gave a talk on organization and its effectiveness and also told the members what good could be accomplished for Keewatin and Itasca county by cooperating with the commercial clubs of the other towns in a publicity campaign which will have for its object the attracting of settlers. Pamphlets by the thousands are to be sent broadcast. The club decided to enter the scheme and raised $100 for that purpose.

A Dutch lunch and smoker was the next on the program and members of the club were called upon to sing and make short talks. J. W. Allen delighted the audience with a song entitled "Watch Keewatin Grow." A. Jackson sang that popular ballad entitled "Ireland Isn't Ireland Any More." Gust Johnson sang "In My Boyhood's Happy Home Down on the Farm" and Charles White closed the evening's program with a song entitled "We're Just Plain Folks."

The club officials have assurance that another carload will be shipped here and planted in a radius of twenty miles of the city. The state fish commission has informed members that it has plenty of pike spawn for distribution and accordingly a request was made for pike fry to stock Stewart, Long and Twin Lakes. None of these lakes are accessible by road from the city but they can be reached by rail and walking and will prove popular fishing resorts if they become well stocked with game fish.

Milady's Toilet Table

By Mme. D'MILLE

Of all home treatments for the hair, the therox dry shampoo seems to be the most satisfactory by far. There is something about it totally different from any other treatment, and the hair responds so quickly. Put four ounces of powdered orris root (or a cupful of corn meal) in a fruit jar and add the contents of a small original package of therox, shaking well together. Sprinkle a little on the head and brush thoroughly. It makes the hair wavy, glossy and lustrous.

To have a fair and lovely skin, to retain the attraction of youth, to keep the complexion clear and beautiful—the face, neck and forearms should be massaged every morning with a solution made by dissolving a small original package of mayatone in a half-pint witch hazel. Use this instead of powder. It does not rub off nor show. Mayatone reduces large pores, eradicates dark and muddy spots, and leaves the skin smooth, soft and satinlike.

Sometimes a sore may be slow in healing. In cases like this Mother's Salve is good to use, for it is antiseptic as well as healing and tends to prevent blood poisoning. It quickly heals cuts, burns, scalds, etc., and will also cure chaps, cold sores, pimples and skin eruptions when not caused by constitutional trouble.

No woman need be humiliated by wild hairs or fuzzy growths. They will vanish quickly if delatone paste is applied. Mix enough powdered delatone with water to cover the hairy surface; apply, and after two or three minutes rub off, wash the skin, and the hairs will be gone.

Supt. Bishop Resigns From Service to Reside in Oregon.

Bemidji, Minn., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—William R. Bishop announces that he has resigned as superintendent of the Red Lake Indian agency in Beltrami county, and that he will be succeeded May 15 by W. F. Dicken, now in charge of the Segar colony in Oklahoma.

Mr. Bishop has been at the head of the agency here since Dec. 14, 1908, coming from Warm Springs, Or., and he will return to the Hood river country to raise fruit.

At times there has been sharp criticism of his work from certain quarters, but he says these charges have nothing to do with his decision to quit the government service.

A Remedy No Family Should Do Without

No matter how healthy a human being may be it is safe to say that not many months are passed without some obstruction of the bowels, in other words, constipation, even if only temporary. The bloating, the dull feeling may start after the evening meal. If a laxative is not taken that night it is certain that sleep will not be sound, and you will awaken unrefreshed.

Hence, it is important for you and for all the members of your family that a good, reliable laxative be always kept in the house for just such emergency. It is sure to be needed, and when needed you want it at hand. No family that is careful of its health can do without such a remedy. But the question of which remedy to have on hand is also of vast importance.

The laxative most highly recommended by the majority of intelligent Americans as being best for babies and grownups is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a liquid laxative-tonic, mild, and never gripes, is effective on robust people and can be given with safety to an infant. Children like it because of these gentle qualities and because it is pleasant to the taste.

It is the best all-around remedy you can have in the house for any disorder of the stomach, liver and bowels, and many people like Mr. O. S. Galvin, Manston, Wis., and Lester St. Clair, Wausau, Wis., say they would as soon be without the necessities as without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Anyone wishing to make a trial of this remedy before buying it in the regular way of a druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a large bottle (family size) can have a sample bottle sent to the home free of charge by simply addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 905 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

PORTUGAL ON THE BRINK

Royalist Claims That the People Would Welcome King Manuel.

Shortage of Funds, Famine and High Prices Cause Discontent.

Paris, April 19.—Portugal is insolvent and cannot much longer resist dissolution, according to a royalist source here.

Though himself a staunch Manuelist, the "exile" has a brother who is just as staunch a republican. From his brother he has learned that the republic is three months in arrears with its payrolls. The brother is an army surgeon.

To make matters worse the national bank of issue has notified the government that it cannot advance further funds for the very simple reason that it is already considerably over-issued. It is stated as a fact that the gold and silver reserve, upon which advances were made to the government, amounts to about a third of the amount issued. Financiers, knowing the situation, refuse to make loans and the republic has had to resort to increasing the already high taxes to a figure which the poverty-stricken people cannot meet. The price of living is soaring. Codfish, a staple article in Portugal, especially among the poor, in the last few weeks has jumped from 30 cents a pound to nearly 60 cents. Crops are a dismal failure on account of the floods.

Anything for a Change.

"The sentiment of the entire country," says a newspaper man who has just returned from Portugal, "is such that the intervention of a foreign power would be welcome; they would be glad to see a king back on the throne. But on the whole they would welcome English intervention perhaps more than anything else."

A rumor has been heard in the European foreign offices to the effect that Spain contemplates taking a hand in regulating Portuguese affairs. I asked Joachim Leitao, formerly of Manuel's intouragt, but now in Paris, about this.

"The very idea," he said, "is absurd. Spain would be putting her hand into a hornet's nest if she attempted intervention in Portugal. The Portuguese and the Spanish hate each other as no other two peoples on earth hate each other and Portugal would resist to a man Spain's having anything to do with straightening out her affairs.

"Another thing is, Spain is right now on the verge of a revolution of her own. The republicans in Spain are tremendously strong, much stronger than anyone thinks. The army is full of republicans, both officers and men included. Every effort is now being made in Spain to dam the stream and the least shock is liable to spill things badly. No, Spain would not and could not risk such a move."

United Front Against the Republic.

That Portuguese royalists believe the time is almost at hand for the "coup" is known as a fact here. The blow will be struck quite as suddenly as that which carried the republicans into power. This time, I am informed, nothing will be left to chance. The whole "affair" will be figured down to the finest possible point, then the "psychological moment" will be awaited. Only the one word for command will be necessary to put the royalist forces in action, and it is believed that this will be given directly by Dom Miguel, who recently renounced all rights to the throne, so far as he personally was concerned, and offered his entire service to ex-King Manuel.

Dom Maguel is living quietly at Stain-Jean-de-Luz, on the border of Spain and France. He is in constant communication with the combined royalist leaders, both Manuelists and Miguelists now being united with the one purpose of restoring the monarchy. Dom Miguel is expected to take the field himself if fighting has to be done, and it is known that if successful, once Manuel is back on the throne Dom Miguel will be named grand marshal of the Portuguese army. This is Dom Miguel's secret ambition, a post his training in European armies befits him to occupy.

BLIND FAITH IN BOAT COST LIVES

French Passengers on Olympic Cable Report to Paris Paper.

Paris, April 19.—Three French survivors, Fernand Omont, Pierre Marechal, son of the well known French admiral, and Paul Chevre, the sculptor, conjointly cabled to the Matin a graphic narrative of the disaster to the Titanic, in which they repeatedly insist that more lives could have been saved if the passengers had not had such dogged faith that the Titanic was unsinkable. Several boats, they declare, could have carried double the number.

The three Frenchmen say they were playing bridge with a Mr. Smith of Philadelphia when a great, crunching mass of ice packed up against the port holes. As they rushed on deck there was much confusion, but this quickly died down. One of the officers, when questioned by a woman passenger, humorously replied:

"Do not be afraid. We are merely cutting a whale in two."

Some Boats Half Empty.

Presently the captain appeared to become somewhat nervous and ordered all to put their life preservers on. The boats were then lowered, but only a few people stirred and several of the boats put off half empty, one with only fifteen persons in it.

When the Frenchmen's boat rowed off for half a mile the Titanic presented a fairy-like picture, illuminated from stem to stern. Then suddenly the lights began to go out and the stern reared up high in the air. An immense clamor rose on all sides, and during an hour anguished cries rang out. It was, say the narrators, like a great chorus chanting a refrain of death, with wild obstinacy. Sometimes the cries died out, and then the tragic chorus began again, more terrible and more despairing.

DEER JOIN A COW HERD

Pennsylvanian Wonders How He Can Get Rid of Animals.

Fed and Cared for Them During Very Cold Weather.

Cammal, Pa., April 19.—Being kind to a deer that was driven into his barnyard by a pack of dogs last fall has resulted in Joseph Gray of near Okome, having on his hands a veritable menagerie, and just what to do with the drove Mr. Gray doesn't know, though he hopes that with the opening of spring and the growth of green browsing his dear friends will take to their natural haunts, thus relieving him of the job of finding food for them —an item that has not been small.

The deer that drew the others was chased by a pack of hounds. The creature, which had evidently been attacked by one of the dogs, sought refuge from its pursuers in the Gray yard. It was fagged to the point of exhaustion. Mr. Gray killed two of the dogs with his rifle, and then turned his attention to the deer. It was terribly torn on the neck back of the ears. It was in such a condition or exhaustion that it made no effort to get away when Gray approached it.

He placed it in a stall in the barn and fed it for several weeks, or until it was able to care for itself, as he thought, and then he turned the creature out. But the doe would not go away. It mothered up with the cows, and every time it saw a dog the poor thing huddled among the cattle for protection.

Seven Seek Food.

One afternoon in the bitter part of the winter, soon after everything had frozen up and sleet was sticking to the limbs of the trees, one of the Gray boys saw seven deer in a field not far away from the barn. They were evidently in search of food. Last summer several deer visited the Gray grain fields, and it was believed that these were the old ones and their offspring coming back. An effort was made to get the domesticated deer to companion with the drove of wild ones, but to no avail. Food was then provided for the animals near where they had come in from the woods—a straw and chop mixed and warmed. Next morning the food was all gone, and the feeding process was repeated. That afternoon the deer family was increased to nine head, and within a week there were eleven wild deer in the herd and they appeared for their food regularly. One day the deer among the cows was led out into the woods and turned loose.

The next day, while the tame deer had evidently found and made up with the wild deer, it had also taught the whole bunch the lesson of fearlessness, for they all came within a stone's throw of the barn to be fed. All winter long one meal a day was provided the queer family of visitors.

Bucks Become Docile.

Mr. Gray estimates that it has cost him as much to keep the drove of deer as it would have cost to keep a cow for a year, though the fact that he has wintered the creatures over is pay enough to satisfy him. Since the disappearance of the snow, however, he has cut down the deers' ration so as gradually to drive them into finding their own feed. He is fearful that as soon as young grain is accessible the deer will browse on that. There are three bucks in the colony, and before the winter was very old these were as little afraid as the more docile does.

These deer have the run of a great range of territory back of the Okome summit, running clear back into the Little Pine Creek region. It is one of the greatest deer-hunting regions in the state, though the experience of Mr. Gray is unprecedented, as the best that had been done heretofore was that deer would often tarry around the schoolhouse at a quite isolated point.

FINE WOMAN.

Chicago News: "I dropped in to see Mrs. Huckleman this afternoon," remarked Mrs. Jamesworthy. "She's a fine woman, and I'm sorry I didn't get better acquainted with her a long time ago. She was telling me something about her housekeeping, and she has some ideas on economy that surprised me. I'm sure I'll be able to cut down expenses by following some of her suggestions."

"I'm glad indeed that you are cultivating the acquaintance of Sophronia Huckleman," said Jamesworthy, with enthusiasm. "She's a woman after my own heart. I've known her ever since she went to school and I gave her my blessing when she was married, and I've watched her career with pride and satisfaction. If Huckleman isn't on Easy street now he's traveling in that direction with tassels on both feet, and you can make a memorandum in your bonnet, Mrs. Jamesworthy, that the credit belongs to his wife. She's a marvelous woman, and the more you associate with her the better it will be for you."

"I quite agree with you, dear. She seems to have made a study of household economy, and she showed me dresses she had made for her two little girls from old gowns of her own, and they were perfectly amazing. Such dresses in the store would cost a good many dollars, and these cost practically nothing."

"It warms me to the heart to see you take an interest in such things," exclaimed Jamesworthy, exultantly. "Now that you are waking to the necessity of economy in this household, I foresee the dawning of a brighter day. You can't do better, my dear, than study Mrs. Huckleman; let her be light to your path and guide to your feet; get wise to her curves, and some day we may be rich enough to ride in our own touring car and distribute largesse to the admiring peasantry. Oh, I tell you, Mrs. Jamesworthy, an economical wife in the house is a wellspring of pleasure. It isn't what a man earns in the clanging mart that makes him independent and happy; it's what his wife saves by good management of the household."

"Mrs. Huckleman expressed the same sentiment exactly," said Mrs. Jamesworthy. "She says her husband's salary is much smaller than that of many men who seem to be in financial difficulties all the time, and yet he has been getting ahead ever since he was married. She seems to have made a study of management, and she laid great stress on the proper time and place to buy things."

"Such a woman!" cried Jamesworthy, rapturously. "It is genuine stimulant to hear such chunks of wisdom from the mouth of a female! Management—that is all there is to running a household. Let Sophronia Huckleman be your guide, philosopher and friend, and I have no fears for the future."

"I'm glad you have such confidence in her. To illustrate her theory of saving money by buying things at the proper time, taking advantage of the fluctuations in prices, she told me that there will be a great special sale of furs at Blinkworth's tomorrow. Prices will be greatly reduced and it seems a rare opportunity. She says there's a beautiful mink muff and boa offered for $150 which couldn't have been bought last winter for less than $200. So I am sure it would be real economy for me to buy it now—"

"So that's what you're driving at, is it?" shrieked Jamesworthy. "If that splay-footed Sophronia Huckleman can't think of anything better to talk about than blowing money for furs, I'll tell her never to darken this door again, and I don't want you to darken hers. I never did have any use for that woman, and I don't see why you can't choose the right sort of women for your friends. I suppose I'll have to dig up for that old horsehair muff to have peace in the house, but I tell you that you are getting money under false pretenses, with your economy spiel."

HOW TO REPAIR THE LAWN

Kansas City Star: Before real hot weather comes and the maple trees bear and shed their wing-like seeds, hie you to a seed store and lay in a plentiful supply of grass seed with which to revive the dead places, for a lawn with any bare places is no lawn at all, just as a man whose hair grows thin on top of his head is, to all intents and purposes, a baldheaded man. But fortunately it is much easier to grow grass than it is to grow hair.

Now there are a great many things that your lawn may and probably does need—better soil, fertilization and so on. For most of those things it is too late now—you'll have to wait until next year. But you will not need to wait until next year to cover up last winter's ravages. A plentiful supply of grass seed and a little diligence will do the business. Of course you want blue grass in your lawn. Everybody does. But it may not be the wisest thing to sow only blue garss at this late date. It takes hold slowly, and if the bare patches are in particularly exposed spots, as they are likely to be, might be burned up by midsummer.

So it is better to buy blue grass seed mixed with white clover seed. The clover seed germinates rapidly and covers up the barren places, and the blue grass later has a tendency to crowd out the clover. Clover performs another important and valuable function. It puts nitrogen into the ground, and nitrogen is what makes the grass grow long and rich. Clover is often planted in wornout fields for this purpose, and serves to enrich the ground.

The seed should be sown thickly, and if you can sow it just before or just after a rain, so much the better. If there isn't a timely rain, make one. Sprinkle the ground carefully every evening and roll the ground lightly.

Rolling, indeed, is an important and much neglected feature of successful grass culture. It keeps the ground even and compresses the earth around the grass roots. The most handsome lawns are trimmed once or twice every week. The grass tops thus clipped are so short that it is not necessary, nor indeed is it possible, to rake up the "clippings." They are left to settle around the grass roots and add richness to the soil. If, however, you wait until the grass is long before having it cut, it is, of course, necessary to have the "clippings" removed, else they will smother the grass underneath. This is especially likely to occur if the grass is wet at the time it is cut.

And, speaking of wet grass, the question of sprinkling is one of paramount importance in keeping up a handsome lawn. How and when to sprinkle are things that everybody who takes care of a square yard of turf ought to know.

In the first place, never sprinkle in the morning, or when the sun is on the grass. It does more harm than good, for the green blades, glistening with moisture, are literally boiled alive when the sun grows hot. So sprinkling should be down about sundown, and it should be done thoroughly. Don't beafraid to give the grass too much water. (The city needs the money that will go to pay your water bills.) Two real soakings a week will do more to keep the lawn in condition than a superficial dabbling every night. The water must get below the surface of the ground to do the grass any real good.

Grass must have food as well as drink and the food is obtained from the ground in the form of various life-giving chemicals. In course of time the ground becomes exhausted; and its supply of plant food is all gone. Then it is necessary to cover it with fertilzier, or if it is newly turned soil and clay, to spade it up and mix it with fertilizer. Ordinary lawns, however, can be kept sufficiently rich in nitrates by being covered with fertilizers prepared by the packing houses which serve the purpose well. The ground absorbs much from this covering, which is gradually washed into it by the autumn rains and the winter snows, and in the spring the residue is, of course, raked away. And it makes a wonderful difference in the thickness and richness of the lawn whether or not it has been renewed with a coating of fertilizer the fall before.

OLD FRIENDS.

Chicago News: "A very dear friend of mine, Tobias Rectangle by name, is coming to spend a fortnight with me," said the retired merchant, "and

"Well, finally he came, with three can't keep from grinding my teeth. We went to school together and when we were young men we were inseparable, and we'll have so much to talk about that we'll hate to quit long enough to eat our victuals. It's twenty years since we saw each other."

"And when he's visited you a few days you'll hope you won't see him again for forty years," remarked the hotelkeeper. "I know just how it is and I have a good deal of sympathy for you, although you think you don't need it. There is no greater affliction than to have a friend of your boyhood come to see you.

"A couple of years ago Andrew Tolliver wrote me from a ranch somewhere up in Dakota that he would be passing this way on a trip East and he would stop off and visit me between trains. I was just chump enough to write him a letter, with a special delivery stamp on it, urging him to arrange his affairs so he could stay here at least ten days.

"I felt just as you do about that man Rectangle. There were so many things to talk about that we wouldn't be able to make a good start in less than a week. Tolliver was my boyhood friend and I expected to marry his sister, but she eloped with a sewing machine agent.

I'm so impatient to see him that I of four trunks full of Indian relics which he had been collecting for a quarter of a century. He wasn't a bit like the boy I used to know. He was all covered with whiskers and there wasn't any fun in him. He seemed to have forgotten all the interesting things that happened when we were kids. When I'd try to remind him of some ancient history he'd yawn and say it had slipped his memory, and then he'd begin talking about his doggone Indian relics, and keep on talking until it was time to go to bed. Nothing interested him but those relics, and he was always chasing around the hotel exhibiting some beaded moccasins or stone tomahawks or some other junk, and several of my best patrons came to me and told me I'd have to sidetrack that old freak, with his relics, or they'd go to the other hotel.

"This thing went on for ten days, and then Tolliver said that he had concluded to stay another week or two, he was enjoying his visit so much. I suspended the rules of hospitality right there and told him that he'd have to hunt another boarding house if he stayed in this town. If he didn't have his junk packed up in an hour, I said, I'd instruct the porter to fire it into the alley.

"Old friends are always false alarms, although it isn't their fault. I haven't seen your friend, Rectangle, in twenty years, you say. Well, you remember him as he was then. You liked him in those days, but you were twenty years younger then, and you've changed a lot since. When Rectangle comes to town you'll be disappointed. He'll seem a great deal older and you have an idea that the people you knew twenty years ago haven't aged any.

"Rectangle, I suppose, has married since you knew him, and he'll want to tell you what a wonderful woman his wife is and what fine girls and boys his doggone sons and daughters are, and he'll want to tell you about his wife's sister, Amelia, and about other idiotic relatives. The first thing you know you'll be yawning and wishing your friend, Rectangle, would lose his footing and fall off the earth.

"I'm always glad to see a friend of two or three years' standing, for a man doesn't change much in that time and you know what to expect of him, but when a back number friend of half a century ago threatens to visit me I telegraph him that I am dying and can't entertain visitors."

ANCIENT PASTRY MOULDS.

If the gingerbread of Elizabethan times was going out of fashion in the seventeenth century the biscuit and the bun were appearing in a quaint and ornate state of infancy, says the Queen. Kingly effigies and royal features were vigorously and not always flatteringly impressed upon the small discs of paste and caraway that lay in the windows of the fashionable bun houses.

Tales were told upon the delectable area of a sugary cake by means of a firm impression from the pearwood or boxwood die, or romance was carried to the lips on the surface of a cracknel, possibly telling the story of the famous Bliddenden maids.

Stamping and embossing of delicate cakes and "jumballs" during the late Stuart times became a characteristic branch of the pastry cook's profession, while in private life, at a period when cookery was considered a lady's most graceful accomplishment, the country chatelaine must have dispatched many an order to her agent in town for pearwood mould, preferably one depicting the equestrian energies of the reigning monarch. With these the loyal hostess could do herself and her neighbors justice.

In Newbery's "Dives Pragmaticus," 1563, a rhymed catalogue of the utensils of an Elizabetha kitchen, we get a long metrical enumeration of the incised rollers for the paste and various moulds and ornaments. Another old book of favorite dishes, "A Queen's Delight," refers to the moulds as cards. Put your cake between wooden cards and sew the cards together until the cakes are cold. Currant breads, very popular throughout the seventeenth century, called forth all the energies of the mould maker; prominent persons and even political crises left their mark within the hollowed cavern of the die.

The favorite material for these old pastry moulds was undoubtedly pearwood, but there are many made of boxwood still in existence, and a set in beech is discovered occasionally. The solidity of the moulds is a noticeable feature; frequently they were more than an inch thick and very heavy, so that their impression on pie and cake must have been an emphatic one. On the other hand the early biscuit and household bun was of equally robust constitution and quite able to hold its own against the assaults of

Morgan's Wonderful Art Collection Reaches America Valued at More Than $5,000,000

VIRTUE OVERCOMING VICE, Italian, Sixteenth Century.

FLEMISH BRONZE CANDLESTICK OF THE TWELFTH CENTURY.

MOTHER AND CHILD, French Fourteenth Century.

The wonderful art collection of J. P. Morgan is now being unpacked at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, but it will be several months before it can be sorted and place on exhibition. This collection was begun by Mr. Morgan's father, Junius Morgan, and has accumulated gradually in the Victoria-Albert museum, South Kensington. All of the objects are antiques and they therefore come in duty free. The collector of customs at New York arranged that the packing should be supervised by one of his agents so as to make the re-examination of the packages at New York unnecessary. In the collection are some wonderful fifteenth and sixteenth century bronzes; enamels of the twelfth century; specimens of Italian faience of the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; many tapestries; some remarkable specimens of stained glass; a collection of old jewels, pendants, etc., a collection of watches; old chairs, coffers, and other objects of wood. The total value of the collection is estimated at $5,000,000.

ornamentation. Sometimes the alphabet was stamped on a cake to sweeten the way of learning for babies.

For Easter cakes there were pearwood moulds of the Paschal lamb. Heart shaped cakes with embossed lovers on them appeared at betrothal festivals. Hunting scenes were popular throughout the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, sleighing parties proved a favorite winter subject, nor were Scripture and mythology overlooked. The vigorous mould depicting Hercules and the Nemean monster under stress of circumstances did impartial duty as Samson slaying the lion.

An old boxwood set of blocks carved in intaglio with flowers and geometrical designs is still in existence, bearing the arms of Henry de la Poer, the second Marquis of Waterford. They date from the end of the eighteenth century and bear the marker's name Hawkins of Vigo street, London. But it is to the fascinating days of William and Mary and Anne that the most interesting specimens of these old moulds belong.

THE RAIN-GODS OF MANDI.

Mandi is one of the native states of India, and the people are superstitious to a degree. Fine weather or rain is obtained by solemn official orders from the government to the rain-gods, the said deities being duly punished if they neglect to carry out their instructions. In the Wide World Magazine, C. C. Garbett, settlement officer, Mandi state, fully describes how the "Rain-Gods" of Mandi work. The following is a literal translation of an order for sunshine:

To Manager Sahib Upida Jat Dev—

The rain has caused great distress; orders and offerings to the gods have already been dispatched. No sunshine has ensued. At the request of the administration, he good enough to send at once for the priest of the god of Chohay (Passukot), for the priest of the god of Parmeswar, and for the priest of the god of Nachan (these are the names of the localities where the gods live); and be good enough to have fine weather arranged for.

Dated Samvat 86 (mandi Calendar), Chet 4.

(Signed) Wazib Sahib Amar Singh.

(Reply.)

Excellency Wazir Sahib—

I have received from Most Exalted Administration the order to cause rain to cease. I have arranged to send sepoys with all speed to call in the priests of the gods, and I will see to everything. Jai Dev.

Accordingly the priests and the gods appeared, but the rain—which, I may add, had come from Persia and was afflicting the whole Punjab—did not cease.

hereupon the priests were ordered to fast until the fine weather appeared, and sacrifices of a goat apiece were made to the gods. It cleared a little then, but no sooner had the priests had a meal than down came the rain once more.

This was too much for his highness's administration, and orders were promptly passed for the neglected gods to be locked up and not allowed out until the skies cleared!

The skies cleared the very next day, the first day of the fair! It remained fine during the whole of the fair, and poured the following day. To this I can testify.

The Vizier and the gods between them shared the credit for the success of the mela, or festival, and the people have received fresh proof of the power of their idols. The native of Mandi sees nothing incongruous in worshiping in a very ecstacy of reverence the very god whom tomorrow he will treat as a disobedient child, asserting and denying almost in the same breath his superiority over these creatures made of silver and gold, the work of men's hands. Truly the ways of the East are passing strange.

MUSIC AND THE LAW.

It is surprising to think of any close bond between the profession of the law and that of music, but a writer in the Judicial Review asserts that "more great composers have left the study of jurisprudence to devote themselves to that of the 'divine art,' or combined the two than is the case with any other profession."

Kuhnau, the forerunner of Bach, studied law to the extent of qualifying as an advocate, and when he died in 1722 was one of the most famous men of his time. Bach was not a lawyer, but he endeavored to put two of his sons into the profession, one of them, the famous Emanuel Bach, studying jurisprudence at the University of Leipsic.

Likewise their English contemporary, Arne, composer of "Rule Britannia," served two years' apprenticeship to a solicitor. Handel and Holzbauer were both destined for the law. Marcello of Venice combined the practice of music with that of the law, and Rocklitz came very near entering the profession.

Undoubtedly the greatest composer who actually entered on a study of the law was Robert Schumann, the centenary of whose birth was recently celebrated. Between Romanticism, with its cult of pure imagination, its fondness for the supernatural and abhorrence of formalism and precedent on the one hand and forensic principles on the other there would appear to be a sharp contrast, if not absolute antagonism.

Schumann was the incarnation of romanticism and in music its chief apostle. One is not surprised therefore to read that his entering Leipsic university as studiosus juris was solely to please his widowed mother, who would not hear of his following an artist's career. Nor is it surprising that she defeated her own end.

At Heidelberg university, to which Schumann shortly transferred himself, her son made the acquaintance of Willibald Alexis, who had already trodden the path Schumann was destined to follow—that through the law to music. And the eminent jurist whose classes he attended, A. F. J. Thibaut, was an amateur musician of high attainments and the author of a work on precisely that aspect of music to which Schumann studied long enough—in all two years—and ultimately hard enough to prove that failure was due to his utter incapacity for a legal career.

Gottfried Weber, doctor of laws and philosophy and state attorney at Darmstadt, was not only proficient on the piano, flute and violoncello but became eminent as a musical theorist. Siegfried W. Dehn, who is remembered chiefly as a critic and theorist, and as the teacher of Glinka, Kullak and Rubinstein, studied jurisprudence at Leipsic from 1819 to 1823. And von Bulow, only after two years' study of the law at Leipsic and Berlin, threw over his career as a lawyer.

SPEED ON FRENCH RAILWAYS.

London Standard: The two words "Quest Etat," which designate the old Western Railway system taken over three years ago by the state, have long been the synonym of ludicrous of vexatious mismanagement and inefficiency, but apparently little improvement is made in any department of the system and the last has not yet been said about the very hopelessness of some of the services.

A very serious case of late delivery concerns the paper works at the little town of Meulan-on-the-Seine, only twenty-five miles from Paris. A formal complaint that has been sent as a monthly circular to the state railway for a year or so gives the time taken for transport from Meulan to Paris as three weeks. This works out at a speed of a mile and a half a day. A truckload of paper sent from Meulan on Sept. 28 was delivered in Paris on Oct. 24; on Monday, Nov. 13, another truckload was delivered; it had been despatched on Oct. 16. This was the result by the ordinary goods service.

The manager decided to try the fast goods service at a 50 per cent higher tariff. A wagonload was despatched o Oct. 24. It was not delivered until Nov. 11. The manager has refused to pay the higher freightage. Meanwhile other means have been attempted. The consignments have been addressed to other goods stations in Paris, but with no better result. The paper mills have therefore decided to abandon the railway, and have bought a couple of motor wagons, which give a service twenty times more rapid than the the state railway.

An expert mathematician gives the speed of the state railway goods service, computed from these facts, as 101½ yards an hour, but apparently this was more rapid than in othe instances. A consignment of six sacks of wax from the Batignolles station in Paris to the suburb of La Garenne took twelve days for a distance of a little over four miles—rather more than twenty-one yards an hour.

The passenger service has often been remarked upon in the Standard. It remains much as before, but there are plans for altering it still further. In contrast with the Orleans Railway company, which brought its terminal point to the heart of Paris opposite the Tuileries by means of a tunnel two miles long, the Western railway organization is considering the advisability of removing its terminus from St. Lazare, Montparnasse and the Invalides, of which the third has only recently been pressed into service for express trains, and yet the administration doubts its ability to maintain a service that has already been reduced without taking its main line terminus out into the depths of suburbia.

PERFORMING TURTLES.

Of all living creatures, says a writer in the Strand, the turtle is undoubtedly the slowest in its movement and probably possesses the least brain. Yet a well known American naturalist has succeeded in training three of these creatures to do a number of little tricks. He places them, one above the other, on spools, and if a piece of cabbage or other green stuff is held out in front of them, they will make a complete circuit, all moving in unison, keeping their balance and not tumbling off. The bigger turtle will also ring a bell. This it grasps in one of its fore-feet, jerks it off the ground, and then gives it a shake. It it quite amusing to watch the slow, deliberate manner in which this is done. The turtles have always lived in their owner's house, spending their time in the kitchen hunting down the vrmin. One of the turtles draws a little cart about the garden, a task which he apparently does not resent in the least. Of course, he is never kept harnessed for any length of time. He is quite tame, follows the children about the garden, and will even eat from their fingers.

GIGANTIC BOVINE SOUSE.

Greenwich, Conn., corporation, New York World: Soren Jensen came up from Banksville today and reported what he referred to as the biggest "bovine souse" in his recollection. He declared that seventeen of his cows had been disreputably drunk for two days and gave this as an excuse for failing to make prompt deliveries of milk yesterday and today. Jensen has one of the biggest milk routes in Greenwich.

Fermented apples were at the bottom of the Banksville bovine scandal. Jensen's orchards furnished the apples that have been carpeting the ground beneath the trees for weeks. There was such a heavy crop that Jensen could not pack and ship them fast enough to clear the ground. Day before yesterday the fallen apples had reached that stage of decomposition where it takes very little churning in a cow's stomach to produce the same effects that are obtained in the distillation of applejack.

Until last night the cows that indulged carried about a more or less ladylike souse, hiccoughing now and then and occasionally kicking over a pail, as Jensen's men tried to milk them. But yesterday they worked up the morning's holdover into a roaring bun, as it were, and there was the deuce to pay all over the Jensen pastures.

When it came time for the evening's milking not a cow could be persuaded to leave the fields, where they were still hitting it up on fermented apples. According to one of Jensen's hired men, several of the cows were attempting to sing and making the most dismal noises imaginable. They staggered all over the lot, bumped into one another and were truly in a deplorable state of intoxication.

It looked as if many of Jensen's aristocratic customers in Greenwich were going without a drop of milk this morning, for the rampagious cows took it as a great joke when the hired men sa down to milk them, kicking them all off their milking stools and playing football with the pails.

Lizzie, a thirty-quart-a-day cow was one of the chief offenders and Jensen relied on her to furnish two millionaires with their daily supply of milk and cream. He was running around in circle, tearing his hair, when a neighbor came over and suggested that he give Lizzie a big dose of bromo seltzer and sober her up.

The neighbors furnished a half-pint bottle of the antisouse powder and JensenJensen emptied it into a pail of water. Lizzie was persuaded to drink, and once she had a taste she drained the pail.

Twenty minutes passed before any effect was noticed, but within an hour Lizzie gave signs of returning sobriety. A little later she had sufficiently recovered her poise to make it safe to milk her. She kicked the first hired man ten feet when he started, but when Jensen had patted and coaxed and soothed her for a while she consented to remain quiet while he got ten quarts of milk. Whether or not her offering bore any resemblance to milk punch has not been ascertained.

Today Jensen gave 100 gallons of bromo seltzer to the rest of his drunken herd, with beneficial results.

"HORSES NOT ALLOWED."

H. H. Windsor in the Popular Mechanics Magazine: How many of us realize we are daily observers of history making; that the transition from horses to motors is actually and rapidly taking place, not only in our big cities, but everywhere. The change is, of course, a gradual one. A horse drops out here and a team there, and no one gives it a thought; but if the horses which have been taken off the streets of any large city had been removed in a single day, what a lot of talk it would make. It is the gradual change, spring merging into summer, which causes us to fail to notice. However, there occasionally appears a real milestone on the course, such as happened in London the last day of October, when a big motor company took over the horse-omnibus company, the exit of the last horse bus being duly photographed and recorded for historical purposes. The hansom cab, ever a most unstable vehicle, is likewise literally on its last wheels, and a few months hence will know it no more.

In a very few years we will see signs on prominent streets throughout all our cities, "Horses are not allowed on this street," and the motor may then be said to have fully come into its own.

Nor is this condition confined to the city. The country roads for twenty miles out of London, in all directions, formerly were crowded with truck farmers driving their one-horse carts daily to and from the town markets. Now the horses are so few that scores of resting places where refreshments were sold for man and beast have been obliged to go out of business. In Europe, where the street car has never been any too popular, they are already anticipating the time when that means of transportation will be forced from the streets into subways.

THE MANSION HOUSE.

Westminster Gazette: The Mansion House, which will be the future residence of the new lord mayor, was built by the elder Dance between 1739 and 1753. This prolonged delay was caused by the discovery of numerous springs of water in digging the foundations, which had to be based upon piles. Originally the facade had a heavy attic story commonly called "The Mare's (Mayor's) Nest." The famous Egyptian hall, which is the principal room, was so styled because intended by the architect to reproduce exactly the Egyptian hall described by Vitruvius. The cost of the Mansion house, £71,000, is alleged to have been partly defrayed from fines inflicted upon nonconformist members of the corporation for not receiving the sacrament according to the rites of the established church, as required by the corporation act of Charles II.

A DRY LINE.

Fairport Herald: For the first time in history every town between Rochester and Oswego on the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg division of the New York Central has voted for no license. After the present liquor certificates expire in Webster the long dry belt will actually exist.

INITIATIVE IS HER SUBJECT

Mrs. W. H. Sweet Talks to Members of the W. C. T. U.

The West Duluth branch of the W. C. T. U. was entertained at the home of Mrs. Lucien Merritt, 4611 Oneota street, yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. W. H. Sweet made the principal address, her subject being "Direct Legislation." What can be accomplished with the initiative, referendum and recall was illustrated by the speaker and the beneficial effect of direct primaries was also touched upon. The talk was an interesting one and was handled in an able manner.

Mrs. Alfred Jaques talked on what has been accomplished in states where the initiative, referendum and recall are already in force.

Following the talks a short program was given, as follows: Piano duet, Mrs. Grace Merritt and Mrs. Edith Merritt; reading, Miss Eva Ketchum; piano selection, Miss Maud Gilbert.

It was decided to serve a business men's luncheon at the West Duluth clubrooms. The following committee was appointed to have charge of the affair: Mesdames T. F. Olsen, I. P. Swangle, C. R. Keyes, David Adams, H. H. Phelps, T. B. Jones and M. E. Allen.

An invitation was received from the Superior Suffrage association to attend a suffrage meeting in that city April 25.

Reports were heard from the presidents of the Boys' club and the Girls' club of the West Duluth clubrooms. The former is in a flourishing condition and the latter shows a substantial gain in membership.

The gold medal for which the six winners of the silver medals will strive for the honor of competing at St. Paul for the diamond medal, will be held at the Central Baptist church, Twentieth avenue west and First street, April 29, and plans were made for the program to be given at the meeting.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Bert N. Wheeler, 3406 Grand avenue, May 2. Mrs. Ruth Merritt will act as leader and the subject to be discussed will be "The Simple Life." Mesdames Randall and Wellington will assist the hostess.

Mesdames Harry Merritt and L. C. Merritt assisted in serving at the meeting yesterday.

WILL BEGIN WORK ON WAREHOUSE

The new Proctor Potato company, recently organized with a capital of $50,000, will begin work on a large potato warehouse at Proctor, April 30. The building is expected to be finished by fall, so that local farmers will be able to store their crops.

The warehouse will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000 and will be fireproof. The Duluth, Missabe & Northern road has donated a site for the structure on one of its spurs in Proctor. It is probable that the site will be accepted by those in charge of the construction.

The officers of the new concern, who were elected at a meeting of the directors early this week, are as follows: Albert Miller, president; Peter Hansen, vice president; James R. Grady, secretary, and F. G. Sugg, treasurer. The directors are: Michael Johnson, H. H. Peyton, John Peterson, F. G. Sugg, Peter Hanson and Patrick McCabe of Proctor; Otto A. Wilte of Duluth, and Albert C. Miller of Munger.

The capital stock of $50,000 has been divided into 10,000 shares of $5 each. The life of the concern is limited to thirty years.

SUPERIOR BOY ESCAPES DEATH IN CAR ACCIDENT.

Charles Cannon, the 12-year-old son of D. M. Cannon, 501 West Sixth street, narrowly escaped death at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon when he was struck by an Allouez street car, while walking on West Fifth street, between Hollingshead and John avenues. The speed of the car at the time of the accident probably saved the boy's life, as he was thrown to one side. The boy was first taken to the St. Francis hospital and later brought home where he is expected to recover in a few weeks.

Conferences are being held daily by members of the commission, largely for the purpose of working out the latter.

It has been definitely determined that in handling the finances of the city, the commission will sit as a committee of the whole. Mayor Konkel will likely take over the general executive departments, Councilman Tomlinson the street department, and Councilman O'Hare the fire and police departments, although the only things definitely settled are as to the finances and the streets. It is the sentiment of the commission that no street commission be named, although this is not settled.

The estimates will be referred to the commission and final action on the matter will be taken at the meeting next Tuesday evening.

DEMAND FOR ALUMINUM.

For several years France was the only country producing aluminum. The number of French aluminum factories has increased in the region of the Alps, especially in the department of Savole, where there are six establishments. With the two other French factories it is estimated that the total output is considerably above 25,000 tions annually.

The reduction plant established in 1889 at Neuhausen in Switzerland has had a most successful existence. Starting with an annual production of forty tons of aluminum, it turned out no less than 2,621 tons in the first nine months of 1910, valued at more than $840,000. The company has several branches, all of which are operating successfully. Its stock has never yet paid less than 12 per cent; in 1906 it paid 26 per cent on a par value of 1,000 francs ($193).

The Swiss control of the aluminum market, which had existed for several years, passed away with the opening of the American factories at Niagara, says Consular and Trade Reports. Neither Switzerland nor France possesses such rich mines of oxide of aluminum and such sources of electrical energy as the United States. Negotiations were begun a year ago with the view of limiting the production of aluminum and keeping up the prices, but owing to the attitude of the American producers, the movement has not been successful up to this time.

Aluminum has become indispensable in the construction of automobiles, dirigible balloons and aeroplanes. It is employed also in paper decorations and for wrapping purposes. It has been found of enormous advantage also in the textile industry.

Combined with silk it makes a brilliant fabric, which can be given any desired color and which cannot be excelled for making ceremonial costumes and theatrical wardrobes. In addition to the ordinary uses it is also employed in the manufacture of reticules, scarfs and various articles of use and ornament, and because of the high price of copper it has been largely used as a substitute for that metal in the manufacture of electrical cables.

RAYNOR FLAYS J. BRUCE ISMAY

Charges Criminality in Order That Speed Be Maintained.

Washington, April 19.—Senator Raynor of Maryland in the senate late today bitterly attacked J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the White Star line. He said the captain of the Titanic undoubtedly acted under the orders of Mr. Ismay, who, he declared, "risked the life of the entire ship to make a speedy passage across the sea."

Senator Raynor asserted that Mr. Ismay should be held responsible for the disaster, and declared that the civilized nations would applaud criminal prosecution of the management of the line.

TAFT MOURNS FOR MAJ. BUTT

"Every Inch a Soldier," Is President's Description of His Late Aide.

Senator Praises Titanic Victim as "God Almighty's Gentleman."

Washington, April 19.—With all hope for the rescue of Maj. Butt abandoned, President Taft today issued a statement showing the high regard in which he held him and his belief that he died as a man sould die in the face of such a disaster as that to the Titanic. The president said:

"Maj. Archie Butt was my military aide. He was like a member of my family, and I feel his loss as if he had been a younger brother. The chief trait of his character was loyalty to his ideals, his cloth and his friends. His character was a simple one in the sense that he was incapable of intrigue or insincerity. He was gentle and considerate to every one, high or low.

"Every Inch a Soldier."

"He never lost his sense of proper regard to what he considered the respect due to constituted authority.

"He was an earnest member of the Episcopal church and loved that communion. He was a soldier, every inch of him, and a devotee of his profession.

"After I heard part of the ship's company had gone down, I gave up hope for the rescue of Maj. Butt, unless by accident. I knew he certainly would remain on the ship's deck until every duty had been performed and every sacrifice made that properly fell on one charged, as he would feel himself charged, with responsibility for the rescue of others.

"He leaves the widest circle of friends, whose memory of him is sweet in every particular."

"One of God Almighty's Gentlemen."

Tributes to Maj. Butt continued to pour into the White House today. Senator Bacon of Georgia said:

"I doubt if there was a man in the United States who had more friends than he, friends who will most sincerely mourn his loss. He was a very rare and, you might say, a unique character, and we shall not see his like again."

Senator Tillman of South Carolina said: "He was one of God Almighty's gentlemen."

TRIBUTE TO DEAD PAID BY HOUSE

Flags on Government Buildings Are Lowered to Half Mast.

Washington, April 19.—Formal tribute to the Titanic's dead was paid by the house of representatives today when at 12:11 o'clock it adjourned until noon tomorrow. The senate remained in session under an agreement reached yesterday for a vote before adjournment on the Dillingham general immigration bill.

The prayer of Rev. Henry N. Cou-den, in opening the house session, was in part:

"We thank thee that though in the ordinary circumstances of life, selfishness and greed seem to be in the ascendency, yet in times of distress and peril, then it is that the nobility of soul, the God-like in man, asserts itself and makes heroes."

The flags on the White House and other government buildings here and throughout the country are at half staff.

INSURGENTS ARE TALKING POLITICS

North Dakota Candidates Being Discussed at Gathering at Fargo.

Fargo, N. D., April 19.—(Special to The Herald.)—The raising of money for the La Follette primary election campaign and the discussion of H. H. Steel of Mohall as a candidate for lieutenant governor, are principal objects of a meeting of thirty or more insurgent republicans here today. Buchanan is candidate for governor, Steele and Hall, candidates for secretary of state, Devine and ..orton, who want to go to congress from the Third district, and Young and Bessesen, who have similar aspirations from the Second district, are among those attending the meeting.

La Follette Campaign Expensive.

According to Secretary Tucker, between $4,000 and $5,000 must be raised to pay off the indebtedness incurred in behalf of La Follette during the primary campaign in this state the past month. This amount is unsubscribed.

On the refusal of Lieutenant Governor Burdick to run for renomination, Steele is strongly urged. Burdick had been indorsed at a former meeting over the claims of Speaker Hanley of Mandan. The latter now seems likely to be turned down for Steele. Insurgent leaders are quoted as being enthusiastic over the prospects for success at the June primary.

THE UPLIFT.

Chicago News: "Who was the old beldame I saw leaving the house as I came up the street?" asked Jamesworthy.

"That was Mrs. Halcyon, and she's no beldame I tell you that," replied his wife. "She's one of the finest women in this neighborhood, and I was proud to see her in our home and I'll thank you to speak more respectfully of my lady friends. The errand that brought her here shows what a noble woman she is. Mr. Leatherberry, the carpenter, fell off a roof and broke his leg, and his wife and sixteen children are almost destitute. Mrs. Halcyon is soliciting funds to buy them the necessaries of life and I put my name down for a quarter."

"Why doesn't Mrs. Halcyon go down in her strongbox and dig up the funds herself? I expect she will collect as much as a dollar in an afternoon, chasing around among the women and getting a few kopecks at a time. She has all kinds of money of her own, but the idea of loosening up never occurred to her, I suppose. That's the way a woman works the uplift, Mrs. Jamesworthy.

"If a man hears a tale of suffering, he will go down into his jeans and shell out a few dollars and think no more about it, but a woman has to go around with a subscription paper, pulling the limbs of her lady friends. Mrs. Halcyon ought to be at home supervising the culinary department and seeing that her husband has something fit to feed his face with when he returns from the clanging mart. But, since she came here, why didn't you cough up something worth while? I should think you'd be ashamed to offer a quarter in such a case. Such parsimony will give you a bad reputation. People will say you're a tightwad."

"You talk as though I had a bank account to draw on. The allowance you give me for household expenses doesn't enable me to conduct charitable institutions or endow universities. I'm always thankful if I have enough left over at the end of the week to buy a bag of popcorn."

"That's all the thanks a man gets for maintaining his family in luxury," cried Jamesworthy. "For twenty years I have been trying to accumulate a package of coin for the rainy day. I am waxing old and one of these days the strenuous life will prove too much for me and I'll want to wear slippers and sit by the fireside and grow white whiskers. That's the ambition of every man whose life is one of toil and self-denial. But after years and years of married life I find myself poorer than I was on the day when you dragged me to the altar. I have practiced every possible economy, but in vain. For years I have smoked 5-cent cigars and have worn celluloid collars and cuffs, hoping to amass a competence, but all in vain.

"You talk about your allowance as though that was all! Caesar, Mrs. Jamesworthy, your allowance isn't a drop in the bucket. Every time I come into the house you back me into a corner and touch me. One day it's furs and the next day it's an onyx hatpin, and then you want the house reshingled or a new furnace put in or a cement drive in the yard or a fountain that will squirt striped water. You spend all your waking hours thinking up schemes to get rid of my hard-earned money, and then you talk about your allowance!

"Then you humiliate me and make my name a hissing and a byword by contributing 25 cents for the relief of an unfortunate man who fell off a house and broke his back in several places! I'm going over to Leatherberry's and do the real thing in the charitable line. I have a few napoleons left from the wreck and I'll give the entire roll to that afflicted family. The escutcheon of the Jamesworthys must be untarnished!"

"You were going to use that money to buy a new hat, weren't you?"

"Great Scott! That's so. I had forgotten about that. I guess I'll send my condolences to Leatherberry and let it go at that. After all, indiscriminate charity is likely to do more harm than good."

MAKING VACUUM BOTTLES.

Vacuum bottles are made on the principle of one holder inside another, with a small air space between, which serves as insulation. The two are then fused together, with such support for the inner tube as can be devised, silver plated to prevent the transmission of light waves and placed in a suitable container.

The basis of the process then is the double glass container. These come to the factory in tubings of approximately correct size, says the Edison Monthly, and are then cut roughly to length. In this process great waste seems unavoidable, for whenever flaws are found there is nothing to do but to throw away the defective tubing. This in fact is one of the chief elements of expense, as the defect may not appear until some of the finishing processes are reached.

After the cutting down of the tubes the work of the glassblowers begins. Expert craftsmen commanding from $40 to $50 a week heat the tube and when it is molten shape it to the right length. At the same time they round and close the bottom. The softened glass is kept in shape by a stream of air within, coming from motor driven pumps.

In some of the bottles the inner tube is separated at the bottom from the outer one by a padding of asbestos. In another make there are three dents in the curved surface which form supports separating the two tubes. These are covered with mica to maintain the insulation.

When the tops have been fused together and properly shaped by skilled glass workers the bottle is ready to be washed and silver plated. First an acid and then a silver solution is forced between the two glass shells, through the hole in the bottom. This can be done only by first drawing out the air, after which the pressure then forces the liquid in.

The bottle with this rather dirty looking solution is placed in a tank of scalding water. A few seconds later it emerges, transformed into a silver coated object beautiful to behold. The plating is then set by baking in an electrically heated oven.

Making the vacuum is the next and the most delicate operation of all. By ordinary pumping one can produce a vacuum of about seven pounds to the square inch, which serves to keep liquids hot or cold for a certain number of hours. When this has been done, in at least one factory, a far more perfect vacuum is then secured by a mercury fall system, so called.

There is an intricate arrangements of tubes of mercury, which in falling produce the necessary pressure to remove the last vestige of air, a vacuum of some fourteen pounds to the square inch. This is guaranteed to keep things hot forty hours and cold ninety, or longer.

Equally important from the commercial standpoint are the details that have been worked out for the making of the various kinds of cases, for vacuum goods are provided in different styles and sizes to meet the public demand, and anything, from a hotel carafe to a nursery bottle, may now be had in tils ware. Accordingly the making of wicker cases and baskets, of leather holders and straps, is all part of the work.

A GOOSE WAR.

Westminster Gazette: Announcement has been made that the German authorities have suspended the importation of live geese from Russia on the ground that there is a considerable amount of disease prevalent in the frontier districts of that country.

Coming as this prohibition does, immediately prior to the period when imports of live geese increase rapidly the question is serious alike to breeders in Russia, who will have large quantities of birds thrown on their hands; to German goose fatteners, as they will be unable to fill up their pens, for the home production is totally insufficent to meet their requirements, and to housewives in Germany, who will find the already high price of what is an important article of food advance still further and probably be prohibitive. Russians state there is no justification for this regulation, that it is a trade move in the interests of German dealers to force down prices and as a measure of fiscal protection to German breeders.

Germany imports annually about 8,000,000 live geese, of which seven-eighths come from Russia, where these birds are bred in vast numbers throughout the western and southwestern governments. They are bought from the raisers by traveling dealers, who drive them in huge flocks to the frontier stations, where they are entrained for despatch to Berlin and other cities.

The cars used for this purpose are built in four decks, each car holding about 1,200 birds. Special trains are run in the season, consisting of a dozen to thirty-five cars, in accordance with the supply. As many as 50,000 geese have been known to arrive at Magervielhof market, Berlin, on a single day.

DEFENSE OF BEEF TEA.

From time immemorial beef tea, or a broth made in a similar manner from mutton or chicken, has been a feature of the sickroom, the pride of the housekeeper nurse, a source of comfort to the invalid, the invariable staple of the menu permitted by the physician.

When it was indisputably proved that the home made broth was in no sense a food, humanity refused credence and invalids went ahead with their consumption of millions of gallons, persisting in the exhibition of sure signs of convalescence and demanding with insistence further supplies of the fragrant potion.

Dr. Thomas Darlington in a recent issue of the New York Medical Journal shows at last the reason of this unshakable faith. Broth is one of the few genuine stimulants in the armamentarium now that alcohol is known to be a narcotic. The experiments of Pawlow on dogs demonstrate that the savory liquid is powerfully stimulant to the gastrict secretion and other digestive fluids, with the result that real food, given with or after the broth, is speedily and gratefully assimilated.

Milk, which disagrees with so many people, will cause no distress if administered after a cup of hot broth. The mere flavor of meat is thus shown to be necessary and valuable to digestion. What caused disgust among the troops in the Spanish war was that the preserved meat, while retaining all of its nutritive principles, had lost its aromatic constituents, gone to make the despised extract for the preparation of broths.

The physician may henceforward advise beef tea and meat broths with a clear conscience and scientific satisfaction; they have triumphed over their enemies and detractors and will resume their honored station upon the invalid's tray as unapproachable adjuvants to digestion and assimilation, adding one more example to the list of remedies founded in crass empiricism, but finding at last a true scientific basis for their raison d'etre.

ARCHIE BUTT IN HERO ROLE

Young Woman Rescued From Titanic Disaster Talks of Officer.

Says She Was Last to Speak to Him and Was in Last Boat.

Washington, April 19.—A graphic story of the heroism of Maj. Archibald W. Butt on the Titanic was told today in an interview given to the Washington Star's staff correspondent in New York by Miss Marie Young, a former resident of this city.

Miss Young is believed to have been the last woman to leave the Titanic, and the last of the survivors to have talked with the president's military aide. She and Maj. Butt had long been friends, Miss Young having been a music instructor to the children of Former President Roosevelt. Miss Young said:

"The last person to whom I spoke on board the Titanic was Archie Butt, and his good, brave face, smiling at me from the deck of the steamer, was the last I could distinguish as the boat I was in pulled away from the steamer's side.

Entered Boat With Her.

"Archie himself put me into the boat, wrapped blankets around me and tucked me in as carefully as if we were starting on a motor ride. He himself entered the boat with me, performing the little courtesies as calmly and with as smiling a face as if death were far away, instead of being but a few moments removed from him.

"When he had carefully wrapped me up, he stepped upon the gunwale of the boat, and lifting his hat, smiled down at me.

"'Good bye, Miss Young,' he said, bravely and smilingly. 'Luck is with you. Will you kindly remember me to all the folks back home?'

"Then he stepped to the deck of the steamer, and the boat was lowered to the water. It was the last boat to leave the ship; of this I am perfectly certain. And I know that I am the last of those who were saved to whom Archie Butt spoke.

Stood Smiling at Rail.

"As our boat was lowered and left the side of the stamer Archie was still standing at the rail, looking down at me his hat was raised, and the same old, genial, brave smile was on his face. The picture he made as he stood there, hat in hand, brave and smiling, is one that will always linger in my memory."

The price was 85.40 cents per foot. The Crane-Ordway company's bid was 90.28 cents and that of the National Tube company 90.25 cents.

NO STRIKES ARE EXPECTED MAY 1

Members of Duluth Unions and Bosses Expected to Agree.

There will be no labor disturbances in Duluth on May 1, the date on which many agreements are signed for the next twelve months.

The only union to buck when it came time to sign last year was the carpenter's. The carpenters wanted an increase in pay, but after holding out for it for some time they discontinued the fight.

Late in the year building became dull and matters were arranged to the satisfaction of both the men and the contractors.

A man well posted on union affairs in the city stated this morning that there is no indication of trouble of any kind between any of the unions and bosses this year.

SOME NATURAL BAROMETERS.

Strand Magazine: The chameleon barometer is certainly a curiosity which has puzzled a good many people, but its construction is really very simple. The animal changes color according to the weather, being pink in damp conditions, purple in a variable state, and bright blue when the air is dry. A cardboard mount is prepared, and this may be lettered in any manner desired. The chameleon is stocked out on blotting paper, and then immersed in a solution of chloride of cobalt, to which are added chloride of sodium and gum arabic. Any chemist will make up the mixture.

A more beautiful chemical hygroscope is formed of a flower made of white blotting paper which has been immersed in the cobalt mixture. The blossoms show many varying shades from bright pink to sky blue, with the changes in the degree of dampness in the atmosphere.

A somewhat curious storm-glass was introduced by the late Admiral Fitzroy. This is formed of a glass tube, stoppered, but with a small hole through the cork. Into the tube has been poured a mixture of camphor, nitre, sal ammoniac, alcohol, and water. The changes in the state of the atmosphere are indicated by the production of feathery growths, these extending upward at the approach of a storm and retreating to the lower part of the tube in quiet weather.

A much more simple, but quite an effective contrivance is the water barometer. This is formed of a glass jam-jar, an empty oil-flask, and plain water. The jar is filled to half its capacity with water, and the inverted flask is placed in the jar. The rising and falling of the water in the neck of the flask indicates the increase and decrease of the pressure of the atmosphere. Of course, the application is the same as that of an ordinary barometer.

Two very singular weather devices are those in which a frog and a leech are employed. In the former case a glass jam-jar is filled to about two-thirds of its capacity with water. A little wooden ladder is constructed, and this is placed inside the jar. A frog will live quite happily in such a position for a few weeks, and it will be found that in fine weather, however, the frog prefers to remain under the water. Even more reliable weather prophets are leeches. A single leech is placed in a broad glass bottle with a piece of perforated bladder or leather over the mouth. On the approach of fine or frosty weather the leech remains almost motionless, curled up at the bottom. When rain or wind is coming the creature rises to the surface, whilst a coming thunder storm will cause it to be much agitated; at times the leech will even leave the water altogether, so sensitive is the animal to an electrical disturbance.

HOW THE WILD BOAR CAME TO NEW ZEALAND.

As everyone knows, writes D. W. O. Fagan in the Wide World Magazine, the pig can claim no place in the indigenous fauna of New Zealand. It was the famous Capt. Cook who first introduced the animal to the southern seas. In the latter part of the eighteenth century he made a present to his Maori friends of the first two pairs of breeding porkers from England, with instructions to turn them loose in the empty land to increase and multiply.

The injunction was obeyed to the letter by all parties. They were a prolific family, that early quartet. With a fecundity second only to that of the rabbits that came later, they soon got beyond the control of the few coast-dwelling Maories, who were too busy killing each other with the recently imported muskets to look after the pigs.

Breaking away, the pigs migrated inland to found colonies on their own account, and it was not long, with an abundant food supply, before they filled the wide spaces of the empty land with vast droves and herds that may almost be said to have disputed possession with the first white settlers.

It was, perhaps, in irony that the disgusted early immigrants nicknamed the wild pigs "Capt. Cooks" in honor of the great circum-navigator. The name stuck, till, at the present day, the generic term is used to include all of the wild pig tribe in both islands, from North Cape to the Bluff.

The numbers of the droves were swelled, later, by recruits from other sources. Capt. Cook was followed by more enthusiasts. A sort of mania for pig-acclimatization seems to have possessed the souls of early voyagers. Shipment after shipment of breeding porkers was let loose on the landscape in the early years of last century by whaling skippers from England and America.

There was sport galore and unlimited pork for the hunting in those times. But, on turning to the sterner duties of life, the early immigrants soon found the pigs a force to be reckoned with. Crops and flocks alike suffered. With the coming of the sheep the pigs quickly developed a taste for fresh mutton, and helped themselves freely to the squatters' lambs.

Exasperated settlers organized for defense against the common enemy. So serious was the menace to the colonists' prosperity that associations were formed to exterminate the pest. All available me nwere engaged in the warfare, payment being made by royalty at the rate of 12 cents per tail per pig destroyed.

To readers unacquainted with conditions of life as found at the outset in the great lone lands all this may savor of a "traveler's tale." But to realize how important a factor in life's affairs was "the menace of the pig," one has only to study the archives of early colonial days.

AFTER THE GAS ENGINE: WHAT?

H. H. Windsor in the Popular Mechanics Magazine: This is certainly the day of the internal-combustion— or, as commonly known, the gas engine. From a crude, heavy, unsightly and highly unreliable machine of only a few years ago, it has developed into such efficiency and dependability that yachts so equipped are sent on ocean voyages of hundreds of miles and fire engines are propelled and pumped by them. While the steam engine has long ceased to show improvement, the gas engine has steadily forced its way into all manner of uses where steam would be quite impracticable. Having thus attained a high degree of perfection in small units—small compared with large steam units—the next advance will be the gas engine of large power. Already experiments are under way in Germany, looking to the construction of a big six-cyclinder gas engine which shall produce 16,000-horse power. A Swiss firm hopes to perfect a gas-engine locomotive which would do away with all smoke and cinders.

These large units naturally would use producer gas in place of gasoline, but the question logically suggests itself, where will the world's supply of gasoline come from, and what will be its price in a few years, if the gasoline-consuming engines continue to increase as they have done in the past ten years? Will the gas engines in the near future be run on kerosene or will the gas engine have its day of prosperity and will be dethroned in turn by something else? The present storage battery will never displace, as it cannot displace, the gas engine, but it is too far beyond the possibilities to anticipate a time when the millions of horsepower now going to waste every day on the tropical deserts of the world shall be imprisoned and converted into some highly condensed solid, which can be cheaply transported. To invent an engine which would utilize this condensed heat and power would surely be a not difficult accomplishment. Already we have gasoline and alcohol in solid form, convertible into gas for use on motor cars, and while neither fuel at the present time finds any large market in the solid form, the demonstration is not without its valuable suggestions.

TRAVEL MAKES TRAVVEL.

The records of railroad traffic show in passenger miles a mile, an increase since 1901 of 54 per cent, as compared with 43 per cent in freight ton miles a mile; and even during the panic period, 1907-08, they increased about 5 per cent, while freight business decreased nearly 8 per cent.

Hard times in business admittedly hit the freight business first, particularly that branch of it that covers factory products; passenger traffic is affected later and often only after a considerable interval. Yet on the theory that business travel should go with business itself, one would think that the upward and downward curves of freight and passenger traffic should correspond pretty closely.

The seeming anomaly of a disparity between the two is deepened by the fact that during the last decade there have been some special and familiar forces operating adversely to passenger traffic. During that period the long distance telephone has come in more and more as a commercial and industrial coefficient. It has reduced what but for it would obviously have been a large volume of railway travel.

To it is to be added the automobile, likewise affecting a wealthy group of habitual travelers; and, finally, says the Railway Age Gazette, there has been the extension of competing street railways using the term to include cross-country and long distance lines. The long distance telephone has had hardly a perceptible qualifying feature. Now and then it may enable a man to notify Smith to make a railway journey, but in the vast majority of cases is is a preventive. Not so, however, with the parallel street railway. At first an active and serious rival of the steam line, it has now, apparently, taking the country as a whole, become, in its secondary stage, a feeder. A small rival still between near together stations of the steam line, it has grown more and more to be a feeder from further points. Its rivalry has been sunk in its character as a subsidiary, saving nothing of the larger values of the electric line as a direct lateral and its facilities for focussing travel at the urban station. The automobile has the same dutiful character of feeder and rival. It competes with the steam line at many points and often on long distances, but it also brings the home, the shop and the store first or last into touch with the station. The rural home of wealth, formerly remote, is now hardly, by figure of speech, by automobile, across the street from the steam railway. The maxim that "travel makes travel" may prove as true in the relations of the automobile to the steam roads as in the case of the trolley.

AUTOMOBILE WHEEL RIMS.

It is estimated that 200,000 pleasure automobiles and about 10,000 commercial vehicles were manufactured in 1910. The rims for these cars would vary in weight from 100 to 200 pounds a car. According to the Iron Age an approximate estimate would place the weight of steel used for this purpose at 15,000 tons.

The manufacturing cost of the rims made from this steel would approximate $2,500,000 and their value at the prices at which they passed into the hands of the automobile owner would be but little less than $5,000,000.

As compared with other forms of rolled steel it is therefore interesting to know that for the more recent types of automobile rims, of which the proportion is rapidly increasing, the automobile owning public is paying something over 30 cents a pound.

The earlier forms of rims were of comparatively simple shape. For solid tires the ordinary channel was of cross section generally similar to the structural channel while for pneumatic tires a rim with a simple rolled clinch was used. The general uniformity of section and its simplicity made this business desirable from the rolling mill standpoint despite the comparatively small tonnage.

The prohibitive cost of machining has confined the form taken by most types of rims to rolled shapes and drop forged fastenings. The demand for greater convenience in changing tires has resulted in the development of quick detachable and quick detachable demountable rims. These new designs have increased the weight of the rims and together with the great increase in the number required to supply the growing demands of the industry have even more rapidly augmented the steel tonnage involved.

The cost a pound on the other hand has increased greatly, for the newer types of rims comprised more parts and introduced new shapes and small sections. These sections are required to be rolled accurately as to gauge, inasmuch as the great danger of tires being thrown off the heel while a car is in motion necessitates the rims being rolled to exact sizes insuring a perfect fit. The further limitations with reference to weight and the necessity for using a fairly high carbon steel to preserve stiffness contributed to a higher cost.

WHERE WOMAN PROPOSES.

Llangwm, in Pembrokeshire, Wales, is a huddled group of blunt stone cottages upon the luxuriant bank of the river Cheddau and within view of the Atlantic. Were it not for its strange customs and the relations of the sexes Llangwm would not merit special attention. The inhabitants are of Flemish origin. In this community mere man no longer holds sway as head of the household, nor is he compelled to earn his own living, says the New York Sun.

This is what occurs to him in Llangwm: If a likely youth and if arrived at an age—not necessarily of discretion—and size that enable him to make himself useful about the house in cooking, washing, cleaning, bed making and such other duties as usually are discharged by the weaker sex, he is approached by some maiden who has "laid eyes on him;" a few words are spoken, perhaps kisses interchanged, and the bargain is completed. Such embarrassing duties as "asking ma and pa" and those incidents peculiar to courtship in other localities are quite unnecessary at Llangwym. The marriage ceremony is if the simplest character, and no such thing as a honeymoon is allowed. The youth settles himself down to his life job and is happy so long as he does not become entangled with the heads of the other households.

The Llangwm maiden is an expert fisherwoman. She rises early and braves all weathers. She not only catches her fish but sells it in the neighboring towns. She is usually stronger than the average champion oarsman and can row with almost as much skill.

Of course the wife is the chancellor of the exchequer in this strange community. As she earns the money, she naturally feels competent to spend it to the best advantage. Indeed, the husband, known among fish wives as "my man" is not considered sufficiently elevated to buy his own Sunday clothes. The domestic fisherwoman queen selects such garments as may suit her taste, and from her decision there is no appeal.

In religious matters the Langgwmians are extremely straitlaced. Dancing, card playing, novel reading are obsolutely barred. No intoxicating liquor can be obtained in the place. For years ago inhabitants revolted against the opening of an inn.

In the house conversation is not allowed during meals, and although newspapers are sometimes brought in they are hidden away from Saturday night until Monday morning. The villagers look askance at all strangers picking their way along the narrow street and stigmatize them as foreigners.

THE OLDEST INDIAN.

Denver Post: Oldest of all Indians in the United States, Sitting Elk, former chief of the Ogallalla Sioux, is visiting in Denver, saying nothing of the war against whom he always refused to make war.

For almost a century he has been a leader among his people, but, wiser than other chiefs, he early realized that the red man was doomed and at every opportunity he counselled peace with the palefaces. He could well afford to do so, for his people knew he was no coward.

"I have never killed a white man," he proudly boasts, "but I have fought many battles and I have done many brave deeds in my long life of 96 years. I was but 17 when I waylaid and killed my first enemy. That was a very brave deeds in my long life of 96 years, many, many enemies."

Sitting Elk is a total abstainer. He smokes cigarettes, but insists he has none of the other bad habits of the white man. He is childless, the last of his line, but he expects to live for many years more—to be hale and hearty long after he has passed the century mark.

Sitting Elk moves tall and stately among his kinsmen and puffs his pipe with a complacency unruffled by thoughts of any immediate journey to the happy hunting grounds.

Bright of eye, keen of mind, the old warrior dons paint and feathers for his appearance with the younger members of his tribe in the headlong dashes across the amphitheater at the stock yards, and rides with an abandon which defies the spectator to single him from the reckless redskins who have but one-fourth his years to their credit.

THEY HAVE STRANGE JOBS.

Answers: There lives at Maidenhead a lady who sells the time for a living. She is the second generation of her family who has had this curious privilege, which was granted originally to her father by the then astronomer royal in the year 1835.

She has about forty customers in different parts of London. She possesses a most marvelous old chronometer, made by Arnold, in 1835, for the duke of Sussex, and each Monday morning goes to Greenwich and has her chronometer corrected, and gets an official document stating that it differs from mean time by so many seconds or tenths. Her customers correct their time accordingly.

It is an old saying that half the world doesn't know how the other half lives, and truly some of the methods employed to capture the elusive f s d are strange in the extreme.

The other day a man appeared in court, requesting compensation for injuries received in the course of his employment. Asked the nature of his work, he said that he got 55 shillings a week for standing in a barrel at fair grounds and letting people shy balls at his head.

Paris has a man who barks for a living. In Paris there is a tax of 8 shillings a year on dogs, and the owners are supposed to declare them themselves. But many get out of this by tipping the concierge, or hall porter. So the authorities have found a man who can bark just like a dog, and are giving him £6 a month to go round at night and bark outside each house, and when a dog replies, to send the name and address to the authorities. The two-legged dog also gets a small commission on each discovery, and does very well.

Speaking of Paris, did you ever hear of a "jambiste?" A "jambiste" is a young man, usually of good family, who attends dancing classes, and helps the master by acting as partner to pupils. He gets no salary, but sometimes meets a rich heiress and marries her.

In London is a man who deals in second-hand plate glass. He buys up broken windows, cuts the remains into panes of smaller size, and finds a ready market for his wares.

There is another who patches wall paper for a living. He is an artist in his way. Cutting a piece af blank paper to fit the damaged spot exactly, he pastes it on very carefully; then, using paints and brushes, colors it to match the ground of the other paper, and afterwards puts in the pattern so delicately that it is next to impossible to find the place where he has been at work.

BOOSTING WACO.

Wide World Magazine: What was undoubtedly one of the most novel gatherings ever held was the "Prosperity Banquet" recently given in the public streets of Waco, a go-ahead little of Texas. In the open-air at night, in the principle thoroughfare of the city, over 1,200 persons sat down to a specially prepared feast and listened to speeches from the leading officials and business men of the town. This unique event owed its inception to the enterprise of the Young Men's Business league, "an organization of 1,000 live wires working, pushing, pulling, and boosting for Waco—the city of actualities at the head of Brazos navigation." The banquet was held in the principal thoroughfare, South Fifth street, the table occupying a whole city block. On the morning of the feast an army of men took charge of the roadway and prepared for the coming feast. The street was first carpeted with a special preparation resembling a green-sward, and four lines of tables each extending a distance of 380 feet, were then laid and covered with the Texas colors. On the east side of the thoroughfare, at about the center of the line of tables, a stand was erected for the speakers. Down each side of the roadway flags fluttered in the breeze, some of the banners stretching right across the banqueting tables. Additional gaiety was imparted to the scene by the myriads of electrical designs and lights. Particularly attractive was the Texas star, ten feet in height, outlined with electric globes, which hung high in the sky in the center of the banqueting space. At either end of the row of tables stood decorated bandstands, from which music was rendered during the evening. The pavements were given over to the general public. At 9 o'clock the 1,200 invited guests began to arrive and were quickly shown to their seats. When the banquet commenced it presented a remarkable spectacle.

THE MARBLE HEART.

Los Angeles Times: Frederick Trevor Hill, the novelist, is the secretary of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, and the other day at the Century club, apropos of charity, Mr. Hill said:

"The best charity at this season is the children's country week movement. To see a pale, gaunt child of the tenements growing rosy and strong beside the windy sea or in the perfumed air of some old-fashioned garden is a joy, and they who will not help this charity seem to me as stingy as the Sunapee man.

"A Sunapee man was setting off on the Little Weetamo for his week's holiday in Boston. The township beggar said to him on the pier:

"'Japhet, ye might leave me a dime or so to drink success to yer journey.'

"'Sorry, but I can't do it,' Japhet replied. 'All my spare dimes I give to my mother.'

"'That's strange,' sneered the beggar. 'Yer mother told me ye never give her nothin'.'

"'Well,' said Japhet, coldly, 'if I never give my old mother nothing, what sort of a chance do you think you've got?'"

A LESSON IN ECONOMY.

Los Angeles Times: Col. Daniel Appleton, at the street cleaners' parade in New York last month, praised the street cleaning department's work.

"And the department is managed economically," he concluded, "though not so economically as to give us dirty streets. Economy such as that would be false, you know—as false as the retail clothier's.

"A retail clothier in a country town sold a cream-colored crash suit to a citizen, and on the citizen's departure an assistant said:

"'The usual price of our London-shrunk crashes is $10, Governor. Why did you let Jones have one for $5?'

"'Well, you see,' the clothier replied, 'Jones asked for credit and it's doubtful if he'll ever pay. Better lose $5 than $10, don't you see?'"

Steel dies now are engraved by electricity.

ILLEGAL SPONGE FISHING.

Washington Herald: Considerable trouble is being given officials of the revenue cutter service in their efforts to regulate sponge fishing among the Florida keys.

In a report just received by officials in Washington the captain of the cutter Forward, which was sent there to enforce the law, says he found a number of schooners and steam sloops on the sponge fishing grounds, but he was unable to catch any of them with any sponges illegally taken.

All of these vessels are equipped with diving apparatus, which is always idle when the Forward is sighted. It is an easy matter for a vessel to suspend diving and to get rid of sponges taken in violation of the law before the revenue cutter can get close enough to catch them in the act.

A KANSAN'S METHOD OF DUNNING.

Smith Center Pioneer: A young merchant in Smith Center has found a way to make slow paying customers dig up. For a long time he sent out monthly duns urging prompt settlement, but little if any attention was paid to them. Getting impatient he sent an enlarged bill to an old lady who had been owing him three or four months and the effect was almost magical. She came in snorting mad the next day with the bill in her hand and the way she went after the young man for trying to swindle her brought the blushes to his cheeks.

He finally made her believe the error was unintentional, and she settled on the spot for what she owed. Since then the young man sends out bills of about twice their proper size to slow creditors and he says it brings them in every time and invariably mad all over at his attempt to cheat them. He says you can even make a deadbeat wrathful by dunning him for a larger amount than he owes.

WHEN THEY WORE "PIGTAILS."

London Chronicle: The edict sanctioning the abolition of the pigtail reminds us that it is not so very long since the pigtail disappeared, not merely from the army and navy, but even from everyday civilian life in England. Waistlong pigtails were the fashionable wear in England about 1740 and before that the bag wig had been adorned with a pigtail looped up in a black silk bag.

As late as 1858 an old gentleman was seen on Cheapside with his gray hair tied behind in a short queue, and even today we can find a relic of the pigtail, for the three pieces of black velvet on the dress tunics of officers in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers are the remains of the ribbon with which the queue was tied.

Using a bed of heavy rubber instead of slate, a Pennsylvanian has invented a combination billiard and pool table that can be folded and put out of the way when not in use.

TOOK FLIGHT.

Chicago News: "I just came over to see if I can borrow your clothesline," said Mrs. Cumback. "The woman is at our house to do the washing and I find that somebody has carried off our line, and I might make a guess who did it if I cared to. I have so much trouble on my mind that I can feel my hair turning gray, and yet such things as washing and ironing have to be done, just as though everything was serene."

"Some new trouble, Mrs. Cumback?" inquired Mrs. Wagstaff.

"Yes, I always have new troubles, and old ones, too, for that matter. While I stand here talking my unfortunate husband is circling around in the air several miles above the earth, blown by all the winds of heaven, and there's no saying whether he'll ever come back to earth again, yet such is the irony of fate that I must go around the neighborhood trying to borrow a clothesline, burying my grief."

"What in the world do you mean, Mrs Cumback? What is your husband doing several miles up in the air?"

"Mr. Crump can tell you what I mean—or, at least, he could if he was able to speak, but they've taken him to the hospital, and, although it may sound wicked to say it, I hope he will stay there a while with mustard plasters on him. If it wasn't for him my husband would be here at my side, instead of cavorting around in the atmosphere like a fild goose.

"There was a captive balloon down by the railway station, an aeronaut having arranged to make an ascension early this morning, and a lot of men and boys went down before breakfast to see it. My husband who likes to take the leadership everywhere, whether the occasion is a picnic or funeral, pretended that he knew all about balloons, although he never saw one before, and climbed up into the car, or basket, or whatever you call it, and was making a speech on the history of aviation from the dawn of civilization down to the present day. He is wonderfully eloquent and the people around were so interested that they never noticed Mr. Crump until it was too late.

"Mr. Crump had a sharp knife in his hand and he cut the rope that held the balloon, and that aerial monster, as the papers call it, shot up a mile or so until it seemed no larger than a baseball. During the excitement Mr. Crump ran home, but was seen by witnesses who will testify in court if Mr. Mr. Cumback ever comes back to solid ground again and sues Crump for damages.

"Some of the neighbors came to me and broke the sorrowful news, and you imagine my feelings, Mrs. Wagstaff, as I stood on our back porch with a pair of opera glasses and watched that balloon circling around up where the moon ought to be. For a long time it stayed in the same place, the air was so still, and then it drifted exactly overhead and I could see Mr. Cumback, no larger than a spider, very busy doing something. Mr. Crump was standing in his back yard next door pretending to be absorbed in his bed of onions, in order to allay my suspicions. Suddenly a bag of sand came down and hit him on top of the head and he just crumpled up as if he was made of paper. Really, he looked like a concertina.

"Then I understood what my husband was so busy about in his balloon. He was throwing the bag of sand overboard. Immediately afterward the wind rose and the balloon drifted to the north like an express train. I can't help thinking how awful it will be if it comes down in Greenland or Spitzbergen or some other outlandish country among the icebergs and polar bears.

"Mrs. Crump acts and talks as though they were the victims and threatens to have my husband arrested as soon as he comes back to earth again, saying that he nearly butchered her husband with his bag of sand, but any reasonable person can see who was at fault."

QUEER WAY OF SETTLING STRIKES.

Mr. G. R. Askwith, of the Board of Trade, has the record of settling, or helping to settle, nearly a hundred labor disputes, and never once during all that time losing his temper, says Pearson's Weekly.

The great Lanchasire cotton strike, the carters' strike in Belfast, the Manchester tramways trouble, the music hall strike, and the recent sailors' and dockers' dispute, these are only a few of the industrial wars in which he has been the successful peacemaker.

France has a counterpart of Mr. Askwith in M. Cheron, known as "the bearded fairy." It was Cheron who engaged in single-handed combat with the naval reservists who struck at Marseilles last year.

All alone, he went from ship to ship talking quietly to and reasoning with the men. Rivelli, Reand and Augustin, three of the leaders, were incorrigible. They were openly making threats, and also assisting men to desert. No one dared to touch them.

Cheron did what no one one believed he would dare to do—arrested them, and, in spite of their furious threats, had them imprisoned. The strike was soon at an end.

There was the threat of a tremendous strike in Spain just a year ago. It was the result of the new anti-clerical legislation, and the Clericalists arranged a large demonstration at San Sebastian.

Eighty thousand men were to come, and things looked ugly.

At the last minute Senor Canalejas, the premier, issued orders that all the trains and steamers which were to bring the strikers to the rendezvous should be seized. At the same time he filled San Sebastian with soldiers. The strike was strangled before it had found its legs.

The Spanish prime minister's action brings to mind the way in which the French cabinet quelled the great and dangerous railway strike which paralyzed France in October last.

Nearly all the employes of the French railways belong to the Reserve. Mons. Briand issued orders mobilizing the whole Reserve. The strikers had either to obey or be arrested as deserters. This clever move very soon put an end to the strike.

The great strikebreaker of the United States is James Farley. Strikebreaking is his profession. He boasts that he has never lost one out of more than twenty strikes which he has tackled.

A man of iron nerve, he has at his back a band of thirty-five well-paid and trusted detectives, so that when trouble is brewing he is the first to scent it.

Besides these he has about 700 good mechanics on his payroll, and another 30,000, most of them ex-union men, whose names and addresses are always filed, and whom he can rely on to rush in in the place of strikers in any part of the country.

During the San Francisco strike Farley made £6,000 a month, and he got a fee of £2,000 for going to Toronto to quell a strike there. The union men are so afraid of him that his mere appearance on the scene is usually enough to break any strike.

The most startling method on record of stopping a strike stands to the credit of Mr. Moss Graham, rich lumberman. He had huge mills at Meridian, Miss., where, owing to no fault of his, all his men went out on strike.

He gave in to their requests, but in a month they were out again. Once more he yielded, but six weeks later they hung him up in the middle of an important contract by a third strike.

"I'm tired of this," said Mr. Graham.

Late that night there was the roar of an explosion from the mills and a burst of flame. Their owner had blown them up and set fire to them.

The strikers starved, and the town was ruined, but Mr. Graham had enough left to retire on.

NEW ENGLAND TOBACCO.

Other parts of the United States produce much more tobacco than New England. "But in quality of leaf, prices received and possible profits of the business," declares the Connecticut Farmer, "New England leads them all.

"The advance census reports show that New England has 21,666 acres in tobacco, averaging 1,740 pounds of cured leaf an acre, which is valued at 15 cents a pound on the farm. No tobacco growing state outside of New England of which we have returns from the present census approaches these figures. Here are the statistics:

	Pounds an acre.	Value in cents a pound at the farm.
New England	1,740	15.0
New York	1,300	7.5
Illinois	785	7.7
Wisconsin	1,100	8.3
Pennsylvania	1,100	8.5
West Virginia	800	13.4
Missouri	950	12.6

"The figures given are the averages of all the tobacco grown in New England, good and bad. The range of values is, however, very wide. Poorly handled crops in a bad year may sell as low as 5 cents, while the best crops of broadleaf in some years will bring 33 or 35 cents a pound at the farm.

"For the shade grown leaf much higher prices obtain. The growers usually handle and ferment their own crops, which in finished condition will bring from 75 cents to $1.50 or more a pound for the whole crop. In general it costs the farmer from 40 to 50 cents a pound to grow the tobacco and he can get from 70 to 90 cents for it before it is fermented or sorted.

"New England probably has as much more land suitable for growing tobacco as is now devoted to it. There is room for many growers of six to eight acres of leaf in the open. There is also room for capitalists or corporations who can handle 300 to 600 acres of tobacco grown under shade. Both kinds of investment will pay if properly made and managed."

SAVING COST IN BUSINESS.

Business men are finding out that it pays to try to make what may seem at first to be small economies. Not long ago a manufacturer was negotiating for the purchase of a 30-horse power electric motor to operate new machinery which his plant had found it necessary to install. The engine running the remainder of the machinery was already worked to its greatest capacity, or at least so those in charge believed. At this juncture, says Business, an expert was called in.

By simply changing the lubricants he got more than 50-horse power over the former limit from the original engine. Not only did he save the purchase of the new motor but actually reduced the yearly cost of lubricants by 15 per cent.

In a cotton mill there was a similar experience when one department found that it would be necessary either to install a new engine of greater power or add an electric motor to the present equipment. By the substitution of better lubricants intelligently selected and used the extra load was handled by the old engine.

It is a common thing to see a concern putting on the screws as to printing, writing, illustrating, etc., in their campaigns by mail—and then to ignore the factor of postage altogether. The spectacle of thousands of booklets being put into the mail with a 2-cent stamp attached when each envelope just tips a little over the 1-cent limit reminds one of the suburbanite who refuses to start for his train until the last minute and then misses it by five feet.

"But it is a very serious thing," the writer continues: "I have known it to make a difference of $2,000 in one mailing—a sum which might have been saved by the application of some forethought and sense.

"By setting their catalogue in 5½ instead of 6 point type a mail order firm saved $75,000 in one year. Their bill for postage alone is in the neighborhood of $45,000 a month. Other great mail order houses spend even more on postage. One of these saved $52,000 by altering the paper used in the catalogue and by trimming the paper close to the type page.

"As a matter of fact, no house should ever plan a catalog, booklet or anything else without taking into account the postage first. The printer's dummy should be weighed, and by no means should the wrapper or envelope be forgotten. Sometimes a lighter weight paper stock will save many dollars. For large catalogs there are very special kinds of paper made which effect big savings through reduction of weight.

"One of the biggest fortunes in the publishing business was built through Uncle Sam's easy going interpretations of the second class postage laws until more recent years. This publisher was enabled to print books under the technical classification of periodical libraries and send his merchandise anywhere at 1 cent a pound.

"One single concern which had been spending $50,000 a year on various kinds of circular matter, gotten out under first class postage, saved $28,000 out of its following year's appropriation and did more business by using matter going out under third class. A certain Boston concern some time ago spent $1,000 on a folder going out under third class postage and got back $44,000 worth of business.

"A Chicago mail order house once made an experiment which proved to them that not more than 10 to 20 per cent of the postmasters sent out such notifications. As each of their catalogs represented a considerable sum, and as postage on each was 22 cents, a plan was finally put through so that if word came from a postmaster at, let us say, Utica, N. Y., telling of a wrongly addressed catalog lying there, the company got some one else in Utica, who desired to have a catalog, call at the postoffice, and by payment of 1 cent, take the catalog which was there wrongly addressed to another individual.

"But this, while a big saving, did nothing to obviate the situation created by the negligence of 80 to 90 per cent of postmasters to notify the firm when the catalogs lay there uncalled for. Feeling that it was not fair to lose this money through negligence of postoffice employes, the matter was taken up at Washington, and arrangements were finally made to overcome this. A total of $2,000 a month was saved by this careful planning and by a trip to Washington, a saving which other concerns can now, too, share."

STATE OF WAR.

Chicago News: "You used to have an excellent liniment, Mrs. Wagstaff," said Mrs. Cumback, hurriedly. "I remember that I borrowed some last spring when I fell down the cellar stairs and covered myself with bruises and it relieved the pain wonderfully. So I came over to see if you have any more of the same kind, in which case, I'd like to borrow it."

"I think there's some left in the bottle," replied Mrs. Wagstaff. "Have you hurt yourself again?"

"No, Mrs. Wagstaff, I'm all right—physically, that is. Mentally I'm a wreck, and one of these days if you look out of the window you'll see me riding past on my way to a padded cell. The way my husband and Mr. Crump carry on would drive a saint desperate, and I'm afraid that it will end in bloodshed at last, and then perhaps the coroner comes to the house to hold an inquest Mr. Cumback will wish that he had been guided by his wife.

"The other day my husband bought a beautiful white horse and he was as happy as a boy with a new shotgun when he brought animal home. I was pleased myself, for I've always wanted a family horse. We fixed up a stall in the barn and put the horse inside, and then went to the house and planned a long drive the next morning, my husband having a holiday. In the morning Mr. Cumback went to feed and curry the horse, while I was getting breakfast, and when he came back I saw by the stern expression of his face that something was wrong. 'A miracle has happened, my dear,' said he. 'Our beautiful steed has been converted into a rainbow. Go and look at him.'

"Well, I went to the barn and nearly swooned when I saw that poor horse. He was dyed all sorts of colors; his legs red and his tail green and his body blue and yellow, and my husband said he looked like an aggravated case of the james jams, whatever they are. It isn't surprising that Mr. Cumback felt bitter. Of course he took it for granted that Mr. Crump did the work, and we discovered that Mr. Crump had bought all kinds of dyes at a drug store the day before. My husband just stood at the window all forenoon looking over at the enemy's house, and Mr. Crump was helping his wife to put up a lot of fine new lace curtains, looking as innocent as Mary's little lamb.

"'Those are fine curtains of Crump's,' my husband said, after a while. 'It seems a pity that such valuable curtains are liable to the attacks of army worms and grass hoppers and other noxious vermin. The only way to protect lace curtains, my dear, is to smoke them.'

"I didn't see what he was driving at, and thought the blow had disturbed his faculties.

"In the night I heard him go out of the house and he was gone quite a while, and I thought he was feeling so bad over his horse that he couldn't rest. But in the morning Mr. Crump came out of his house dancing and frothing and shaking his fist at our house, and swearing that he'd have the law on us. Even while he talked a pillar of smoke was coming out of his house. Then he got a ladder and climbed up on his roof and began pulling a lot of burlap sacks from his chimney. Then I understood what my husband meant when he talked of smoking those curtains. He had stuffed the Crumps' chimney and when Mr. Crump put coal in the stove in the morning the smoke filled the house.

"My husband stepped out and began to express his sympathy in the kindest way, but Mr. Crump tore a brick from the chimney and threw it, and it hit Mr. Cumback between the shoulders, and that's why I want the liniment."

A PENNSYLVANIA FAMILY RECORD.

Philadelphia record: A remarkable family record has come to public notice in the celebration of the 97th anniversary of the birth of Mrs. Emeline Johnson of Lock Haven. She was a playmate in childhood of James Fenimore Cooper, the famous author. Her husband, David Johnson, was the first man to carry mail from the Philadelphia & Erie station to the Lock Haven postoffice. He died in 1862. Mrs. Johnson is the mother of twelve children, all of whom are living. The oldest is 78 years of age and the youngest 50. Six of them were at the birthday party, together with a number of grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. The record seems still more remarkable when it is noted that four of the sons served in the Civil war and only one was wounded.

WHEAT MAKES NEW RECORD

Boom Figures Following Defeat of Reciprocity Are Surpassed.

Reports of Damage Still Coming---Good Demand Puts Flaxseed Up.

Duluth Board of Trade, April 19.—Duluth wheat today closed at a figure above the very highest of the boom days following the defeat of Canadian reciprocity last fall. Duluth cash No. 1 northern on Oct. 21 sold for $1.12⅛ but today it sold for $1.12½. The advance was due to the continued reports of damage to the American winter wheat crops. Early in the day, it seemed that the primary receipts were going to be less than those of a year ago.

Later reports showed them to be a little ahead today. Yet this did not keep wheat from making very bullish closes on all of the North American markets. Duluth May gained 1½c. Cash wheat closed 1c over May. Durum was 1c off and rye 1c up. Oats gained ⅜c. Barley closed unchanged. Duluth May and July flax closed at an advance of 1c.

Today was a very bullish one on the wheat markets of North America, breaking even the high record of last October, after the market had been bulled by the defeat of the proposed Canadian reciprocity treaty. Reports of more and more damage to the winter wheat of the United States kept coming to day, and this, added to a falling off in primary receipts, compared with those of a year ago, and to bullish European market news, sent wheat away above the high level that it reached at the close yesterday.

Duluth May wheat, which closed yesterday at $1.10 bid, opened today at $1.10¼ bid, and at noon was quoted at $1.11¼ asked. There were also big bulges at Chicago, Minneapolis and Winnipeg.

The market at Liverpool was bulled by the American crop news; by the closing of the Dardanelles, which shut off the shipment of Russian wheat by way of the Black sea; by reports of unsatisfactory weather for harvesting in India, and by the unsatisfactory condition of wheat arriving on the Liverpool market. Liverpool wheat closed today ⅜@¾d higher.

Flaxseed Is Higher.

An improved demand on the part of crushers, together with rather bullish news from Buenos Ayres and London put Duluth flaxseed up today, and at noon both May and July were 1c higher. There has been a better demand of late for linseed oil on the part of paint factories, and this in turn has made better customers of the crushers. Winnipeg May flax at noon today was unchanged at $1.94½ bid. Buenos Ayres May flax closed last night at $1.76⅝, being ⅛c higher. London Calcutta flax for April and May delivery closed today at $2.16⅞ being ⅞c higher.

T. W. Lewis wired from Kansas City: "One-fourth of the acreage is lost along the Alton from St. Louis to Kansas City, and the condition of the rest is below 65. There is some very fine wheat in Salina and Lafayette counties, fifty miles east of Kansas City, but elsewhere the crop is in very poor condition. Fields generally show bare spots and thin stand, with every prospect of making a small yield. The acreage of oats will be largely increased as a result of abandoned acreage."

Dennis wired from Chicago: "Roughly speaking, the situation in Indiana, Ohio and Illinois looks like about 40,000,000 acres of wheat in these states against 112,000,000 a year ago. This, with the news coming from the Southwest, means premiums for winter wheat, and there is not much use of looking for any setback of any importance yet."

W. H. Houston wired from Kansas City today: "I look for an abandoned wheat acreage of 1,000,000 acres in Kansas, 1,000,000 in Missouri, 4,000,000 in Illinois, Indiana and Ohio together, and 1,000,000 in all other states."

Inglis makes the loss of wheat in Illinois, Indiana and Ohio the largest he ever has known in twenty-five years, being fully 4,000,000 acres, or more than 60 per cent of the total acreage. The balance may make 75 per cent of a crop.

Minneapolis today reported a good cash demand but mills were taking so much from the elevators that prices were on a wider range. There were scattered flour sales with a small sale of patents and exports for foreign markets.

Le Count wired from Dayton, Ohio: "On the way from Defiance, wheat is very poor. Many fields are perfectly bare. There are some fields with green spots, where wheat is alive but the greater part will be sown to oats. Only a small percentage of the oat crop is sown in Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, and the season is growing so late that the chances for a big oat crop are growing less each day."

The following is from B. W. Snow, dated at Kansas City: "In the Mississippi river countries of Missouri, north of St. Louis, there is heavy abandonment of wheat acreage, ranging from 10 to 60 per cent. In the big central counties north of the Missouri river, Anderson, Galloway, Boone and Howard, fully 30 per cent is being disced and drilled into oats. In both of these districts on the acreage left for harvest, the stand is thin and spotted and does not promise above half a crop. The big central counties south of the river, Cooper, Salina, Lafayette and Jackson, show only moderate winter killing, perhaps 10 per cent, but the plant is of small stand, and the condition is not above 75. I have not seen a really good field between St. Louis and Kansas City, while I have seen hundreds entirely or partially seeded to oats. If the rest of the state has gone back since the government report as much as these big river counties, it means half a crop or less for Missouri. Farmers are rushing work in the fields."

* * *

T. W. Lewis wired from La Plata, Mo.: "I have just been in Ralls, Monroe, Randolph, Chariton, Carroll and Ray counties. Wheat in the Missouri river bottoms looks pretty good. Over near Kansas and along the river the general impression is that the crop will be two-thirds of the average, but on the uplands it is not at all good. In my talk with the farmers, who a week ago thought conditions fine, I find that they now claim that all the upland wheat will be almost a complete failure. Some farmers are plowing it up. Many farmers claim half a crop, but most of them say there is not over a fourth to a third of a crop."

CHICAGO MARKET.

Wheat Prices Bulge on News From Fields and Abroad.

Chicago, April 19.—Wheat prices bulged today as a result of the closing of Dardanelles on account of the Italian bombardment. There were also dispatches at hand declaring that not one really good field of wheat was to be seen between St. Louis and Kansas City, and that if the rest of the state had one back as much it meant half a crop or less for Missouri. The opening was ⅜ to ⅞c higher. July started at $1.07⅛ to $1.07½, a gain of ⅜@½c to ¾@⅞c and rose to $1.07¾.

Reports of twenty boat loads engaged for Lisbon and of a big decrease in stocks at Minneapolis brought about additional firmness. So did tidings of severe damage in Iowa. The close was strong with July 1¾@1⅞c net higher, at $1.08½.

Corn rallied because of statements that imports from Argentina would not reach the United States until well into June. The July option opened ¼@⅜c to ½@⅝c up at 76¼ to 76½c, touched 75⅞c and then advanced to 76⅜c.

The market went yet higher, helped by active demand South. The close was firm at 76½@76⅝c for July, ⅝c above last night.

The fact that nearly half a million bushels of oats had been unloaded from boats here to supply immediate needs had a bullish effect on that cereal. July started at last night's level to ⅛c up at 53⅞ to 54⅛c and sold at 54¼c but dropped to 53⅝c.

Provisions sagged in consequence of a decline at the yards. Initial sales were 5 to 15c down, with September delivery $18.67½ for pork, $10.52½ to $10.55 for lard, and $10.25 to $10.35 for ribs.

ADVANCES IN STOCKS

Prices Rise Strongly in Final Hour and Close Is Steady.

Old Marconi Wireless Continues Upward Flight on the Curb.

New York, April 19.—Without exception prices tended downwards at today's opening. The greatest weakness was in the coppers, New York Central, Baltimore & Ohio, American Can, Colorado Fuel and International Harvester. Dealings were light.

Stagnation the like of which the market has not witnessed in many weeks, prevailed during the morning session of the stock market. Dealings were so light as to have absolutely no significance and the movement was altogether perfunctory. The financial community was still under the spell of the great marine tragedy and there seemingly was no disposition to trade for either side of the account. Bonds were easier.

Speculative selling caused heaviness in some of the favorite stocks but they rallied easily when these offerings ceased. A further jump in Bethlehem Steel preferred to 71½ making its rise over 5 points, caused talk of impending favorable developments. St. Louis Southwestern consol 4 per cent bonds were in brisk demand and rose 3 points to 84½.

The market closed steady. Prices bounded strongly upward in the closing hour. All of the prominent stocks improved sharply, with an especial demand for United States Steel and Union Pacific. The Bethlehem steel stocks continued their rise, the common gaining 3½ points and the preferred 8 points on the day. Western Union rose over 3 points on reports of a contract with Marconi interests. On the "curb" Marconi Wireless, old, continued its upward flight, selling more than 100 points above its closing figure of yesterday. The profit-taking toward the end resulted in some recessions.

The New York stock quotations furnished by Gay & Sturgis, 326 West Superior street.

Cotton Market.

New York, April 19.—The cotton market opened steady at a decline of 6@11 points under realizing and a little local selling inspired by lower cables and the better weather of the past twenty-four hours in the South. There seemed to be little prospect of generally clearing conditions, however, and while there was much talk of a reactionary movement in the ring, the market ruled very steady during the middle of the morning with prices 4@5 points up from the lowest, on renewal covering and trade buying. Offerings were restricted by the official forecasts for unsettled weather with showers in Central and Northwestern sections of the belt tonight or tomorrow.

Spot closed steady, 5 points lower; middling uplands, 11.80; middling gulf, 12.05. Sales, 1,700 bales.

Futures closed steady; closing bids: April, 11.27; May, 11.37; June, 11.40; July, 11.50; August, 11.51; September, 11.51; October, 11.58; November, 11.60; December, 11.65; January, 11.62; February, 11.62; March, 11.71.

Midway Horse Market.

Minnesota Transfer, St. Paul, Minn., April 19.—Barrett & Zimmerman report: Trade is on a retail basis, the bulk of the clearance going to farmers from Michigan, Wisconsin and Northern Minnesota. Judging from the demand for horses from the cutover districts of these states there must be a large amount of new land being put under cultivation. After the heavy receipts of yesterday, arrivals were very limited. M. W. Barnard, the railroad contractor, bought twenty-two head of big mules, which were shipped to Anamoose, N. D. A. Guthrie & Co. bought a large bunch of mules, which were shipped to different points where they are operating. Shipments were made to Anamoose and Page, N. D.; Bessemer, Mich.; Eau Claire and Cumberland, Wis.; Moose Lake and Waseca, Minn., and Winnipeg, Man.

COPPER STOCKS DULL BUT FIRM

State Holiday at Boston Prevents Any Great Amount of Trading.

The Boston exchange was closed today, and as that important source of information on the copper stock situation was cut off, there was very little trading in the red metal shares in any part of the country. There were some transactions in coppers on the New York stock exchange, however, and some curb trading at Boston. On the whole, the general level of prices was kept about where it was at the close yesterday. Amalgamated and Vermilion closed lower and Giroux, Butte-Alex Scott, Red Warrior and North American showed gains. The changes, however, were all slight. The news from the copper metal market of London was slightly bearish, spot and futures both being 1s 3d lower at the close than at the close of yesterday.

The first available official statistics of the world's copper production for 1911, compiled by Henry R. Merton & Co. of London, show a production last year throughout the world totalling 873,460 tons, as compared with 855,685 tons in 1910, 451,295 tons in 1902 and 310,472 tons in 1892. Of last year's output the United States contributed more than half, or 492,650 tons. The most important change, however, was the jumping of Japan into second place with a production of 55,000 tons, as compared with 54,030 tons, Mexico's record, the position of which country Japan superseded. On the other hand, there were declines in production, notably the drop in the Mexican output from 61,515 tons to 54,030 tons, and in Chile's yield from 35,325 tons to 26,595 tons.

Two years' comparison of the world's production for the first time published in this county appears below in English tons of fine copper:

	1911.	1910.
Africa	16,980	15,205
Australia	41,840	40,315
Canada	24,930	25,715
Chile	29,595	35,235
Germany	22,010	24,710
Japan	55,000	46,000
Mexico	54,030	61,515
Peru	25,445	18,305
Russia	25,570	22,310
Spain and Portugal	52,045	50,255
United States	492,650	484,935
Miscellaneous	33,365	31,185
Total	873,460	855,685

Throughout the world plans have been made for increased copper production which eventually should settle the metal market materially. Russia will play an important part, as its production this year will, it is estimated, increase about 10½ per cent over 1911, when 60,166,400 pounds were produced. Should this predicted gain materalize the Russian output for 1912 would exceed 67,000,000 pounds.

Two new pumps of a capacity of 800 gallons each have been installed in the Vermilion Steel company's mine at a station on the 340-foot level. This was found to be necessary on account of the increased flow of water, which occurred just after the ore body was encountered a few weeks ago. The work of drifting on the ore body was rushed yesterday.

The sinking of the shaft on the property of the North American is progressing at the rate of about twelve feet a day, and a depth of 215 feet has been reached. The rock is being assayed for gold at every five feet of additional depth. One recent assay resulted in the discovery of gold to the amount of $41.34 to the ton of rock. Considerable quantities of the rock are being shipped to Salt Lake City for treatment.

* * *

Rumor has it that a well-known mining man of Duluth, who has already succeeded with iron, is buying up lands on the Vermilion for their gold-bearing properties.

* * *

Word has been received from the Star district of Utah to the effect that a rich strike has been made in the mine of the Red Warrior company. It is said that a fifty-foot drift revealed a body of ore that was of high grade in silver and lead. It is said that the ore is among the richest that was ever taken from any of the mines of that district. Assays of the ore are now being made every few feet.

To the Stockholders of Butte and Superior Copper Co., Limited.

You have already been informed regarding the plans of the management with reference to equipping the properties of your company with a mill of a capacity of 500 tons of ore per day. The work of construction has been prosecuted diligently and during this period the developments in the mine have disclosed ore reserves of such magnitude and extent that your engineers have united in the recommendation that the capacity of the mill be increased to 1,000 tons of ore per day and that the mine be equipped to meet these requirements. The additional savings and economies that may be introduced by operating on the larger basis above stated fully justify the additional expenditures necessary to accomplish it. Your board has therefore unanimously recommended the sale of an additional 30,000 shares of stock. This stock will be offered for subscription pro rata to all stockholders of record at the close of business on April 27, 1912, and in view of the fact that the company has outstanding convertible bonds which the holders may elect to convert into stock prior to that time, the exact basis of apportionment cannot now be stated. Stockholders of record on said 27th day of April, 1912, will have the right to subscribe up to and including May 15th, 1912, at $27.50 per share, payment in full for the stock to accompany the subscription, which must be made on or prior to the said May 15th. Immediately after the closing of the books on April 27th subscription warrants will be forwarded to all shareholders covering their right to subscribe and containing full directions as to remittances. The entire issue of 30,000 shares has been underwritten at the price stated by Messrs. Hayden, Stone & Company.

Butte & Superior Copper Co., Lt'd. By Its Board of Directors.

ANOTHER WONDERFUL ROAD.

In May, 1910, the new highroad through the Dolomites, running from Botzen to Toblach, was finally thrown open. It is a miracle of able engineering and serves as connecting link between the lake district of Italy and Bavaria.

Or, if one has large cities for one's objective points, between Milan or Venice and Munich. It is worth trying, says a writer in Harper's Weekly, to convey an impression of the magnificent scenery, the picturesque and wonderful country through which this highroad, as smooth and perfect as Riverside drive, since the recent repairs, leads one.

Botzen on the south and Toblach on the north are the entrance gates to the great, gaunt Dolomites. It was a burgher of Botzen, one Heinrich Kunter, who first obtained permission to hew a road from the Brenner Pass to Botzen. He began the undertaking in the year 1314 A. D., and it is to be hoped that his happy ghost rejoices today in the perfect fulfilment of his idea.

The one disappointment to the motorist on this great road is that the shortcut from Botzen to Vigo di Fassa, leading through the lovely Eggen-Thal and past the Karer See, is closed to motors. For those who can foot it it is worth while to bid ease farewell for a day or so and loiter through the wonderful valley, making the ascent of the lonely Kare, going up between the gloomy chalk cluffs, along steep ridges, looking far away over the valley and the rolling mountains beyond, and so learning really to know and feel these gaunt ghosts of mountains that have earned by their whiteness and ready, reflections the title "Mountains of Light."

FORTUNE IN HIS LUCKY COIN.

Los Angeles Times: The grimly humorous goddess of fortunes good and ill never wrought for the heroes of a Scheherazade or a Hans Anderson a stranger trick than that by which she recently thrust a fortune into the pocket of an unsuspecting grocer's clerk of Los Angeles.

He is Charles L. Cross, a clerk for Frank A. Valle, a grocer of South Main street. For nearly fifty-five years he has carried as a lucky pocket piece a silver half dollar of the same date as the year of his birth, 1853.

And it has justified his faith in its luckiness at last, for from being merely a battered and war worn four-bit piece of ancient vintage and doubtful beauty it has suddenly leaped to relatively enormous value as the second known coin of that date in existence. In cold cash its increase is worth 60,000 per cent of its face figures.

Twenty-five hundred dollars was refused with scorn by the owner of the only other 1853 half dollar known to exist—rated as the most valuable coin now in the exhibit of the American Numismatic association in Chicago. There are few individual coins of greater value by record of their rarity than the 1853 half dollar, even the historic dollar of 1804 taking a back seat when it comes to relative scarcity.

More than half a century ago in his native town of Niles, Mich., the coin was given to Cross as a birthday present because it was struck off in the same year of his birth. It went into the pocket of young Charles' first pair of pants and in his trousers pocket it has remained ever since. The trousers have changed from time to time, but the coin has never left his possession even over night.

Cross is now 58 years old and his life has not always been an easy one. He has seen the time when his luck piece was silent in his pocket because there was not even a penny there to jingle it with. There have been times when he has taken the four bits from its resting place and was about to sacrifice it for its equivalent in bread and beans because except for it he was absolutely dead broke, hungry and without where to lay his head.

Through it all, however, he has clung stubbornly to the coin and successfully resisted every temptation to spend it. There has always been in the back of his head the whimsical idea that it would some time bring him luck. And it has brought him luck.

EGGS AND POULTRY IN CHINA.

For hundreds of years China was the greatest poultry producing nation in the world, and probably this is true today, not only as regards the total production, but also in per capita use.

Of the more than 300,000,000 population of China shown by the last census there are few indeed who do not in the course of a year consume something in the way of poultry—chickens or ducks or geese—and certainly a large number of eggs.

For considerable portions of the population poultry is the only animal food used, and for the more well to do classes it is an ordinary meat diet the year around. Ducks are pickled, dried, tinned and otherwise preserved and shipped to many parts of the world to Chinese who are away from a home supply. Eggs of all kinds are used fresh and are cured by burying in clay and lime until they acquire something of the quality of cheese and are a great Chinese luxury.

There are a few families in China, says Consular and Trade Reports, even in the larger cities, that do not have at least some chickens. Near the ports open to foreign trade there are a few rather good sized poultry farms as a rule.

Ducks are raised in immense numbers on farms along the canals and rivers of Central and South China, and are much more common than chickens. One of the customary sights along the grand canal in mid-China, for example, is that of a Chinese duck farmer in his boat watching his flock feed in and along the canal. The ducks are trained to obey him, and, armed with a long bamboo pole to guide them, he controls their movements and takes them back to shelter for the night.

The surplus of poultry and poultry products which china can export annually is immense. Up to the present exportation has taken the form largely of egg products, mostly dried albumen and yolks. The trade in eggs and egg products is rapidly increasing as may be seen from the fact that the exports of egg albumen and yolks in 1908 were valued at $463,038 gold and the shipments of fresh and preserved eggs at $1,204,785 gold, while in 1909 the values were $818,829 and $1,529,685 respectively.

During the last year several cargoes of Chinese meat and game products were sent to the United Kingdom with great success, and in these shipments were included poultry and eggs. The quantities of poultry thus exported, however, cannot be given with any degree of accuracy since the returns include such products under the general term of "provisions." The amount is considerable, however, and it is increasing. Apparently the only requirement for indefinite expansion of this market is proper shipping and selling arrangements. The product, both poultry and eggs, can be delivered at exporting points in China more cheaply than probably at any similar place in the world.

HARE PURSUED BY GULLS.

The Scotsman: As I walked over the golf course at Dunbar my attention was directed to a flock of seagulls screaming loudly and making frequent dashes at something on the turf. This proved to be a hare running at top speed which the gulls seemed to be teasing in sport.

The hare plunged into a pool about 400 yards wide near the seashore and swam across in good style with the gulls flapping around him and screaming their loudest. He reached the outer reef in safety and made a crevice in the rock his shelter for the time being. The gulls tried their best to set him going again, but like br'er rabbit, he "sat tight and said nuthin'," so his tormentors flew away, leaving him in peace.

ROOSEVELT LEADS IN OREGON---LANDSLIDE AT NEBRASKA POLLS

Wilson Also Ahead at Democratic Primaries on the Coast.

Senator Bourne Apparently Beaten By Benjamin Selling.

Clark Strong in Nebraska and Bryan Leading for Delegate.

Portland, Or., April 20.—With one-fourth of the votes counted early today, the indications were that Col. Roosevelt carried the state in the presidential preference primary yesterday by about 6,000 plurality. The race for second place is in doubt, President Taft and Senator La Follette running neck and neck.

Governor Woodrow Wilson is apparently the Democratic choice for the presidential nomination.

In the contest over the United States senatorship on the Republican ticket, Benjamin Selling of Portland is leading Senator Jonathan Bourne, Sr., and based on the present ratio he should carry the state by between 8,000 and 10,000. Dr. Harry Lane of Portland has won the Democratic nomination for United States senator.

Nebraska for Roosevelt.

Omaha, Neb., April 20.—Col. Roosevelt seems to have been the overwhelming favorite of the Republicans in the state-wide presidential preference primary held in Nebraska yesterday, and indications are that Champ Clark was the choice of the Democratic party.

Due to the late closing of the polls, only about one-seventh of the vote, it is estimated, has been counted, but the returns received thus far are from so many different sections of the state that they are believed to show the general trend of the voting.

NESBITT HELD ON FRESH WARRANT

Forgery Charge Is Dismissed and That of False Statements Is Made.

Chicago, April 20.—Charges of forgery against Dr. W. Beattie Nesbitt, former president of the Farmers' bank of Toronto, Canada, were dismissed today and he immediately was arrested on a new warrant. Counsel for the former banker declared that extradition would be resisted, and United States Commissioner Foote, who issued the warrant, held Dr. Nesbitt without bail and set the hearing of the extradition argument for April 26.

The new warrant charges the former banker with fraud by making false statements to the minister of finance of the Dominion of Canada as to the condition of the Farmers' bank of Toronto.

The change in front in the Nesbitt case came yesterday after Nesbitt's counsel had decided to have his client waive examination on the forgery charge and proceed to Toronto to face his accusers. W. D. Greer of the criminal investigation department of the Ontario provincial police, filed the new charges, which the Canadian officials believe will be more easily supported by the evidence.

Attorney W. K. Pattison, counsel for Nesbitt, then decided that although the charge was an offense less serious than forgery, he would resist extradition.

GERMANS SEEK TO INSURE SAFETY

Regulations as to Seagoing Boats Are Being Investigated.

Berlin, April 20. — The motion introduced in the reichstag yesterday requesting the imperial chancellor to order an investigation as to whether German steamships are equipped with sufficient life saving apparatus for all the passengers and crew was considered today.

Clemens Delbrueck, minister of the interior, and vice chancellor of the empire, said that the government was already in communication with the big shipping companies, and would see that everything necessary and possible should be done. Positive measures, however, could not be proposed before the details of the catastrophe to the Titanic had been learned.

Herr Delbrueck declared that he had instituted a revision of the German regulations as soon as the first details of the Titanic disaster became known, and in the immediate future will convoke a conference of the shipping companies and maritime associations. He says he is convinced the German captains, shipping companies and constructors whose responsibility and care for the passengers and crew entrusted to them are recognized by the whole world will find ways and means to provide for everything necessary.

The question as to whether international regulation of the passenger ship traffic is advisable has been discussed by the German government and Germany is ready to act on any proposition with this end in view. The motion was withdrawn.

DIED TRYING TO SAVE GIRL

Capt. Smith's Fate Told of By Fireman of the Titanic.

Survivor Says Chief Tried in Vain to Get Child to the Boats.

New York, April 20.—Taking refuge on the bridge of the ill-fated Titanic, two little children remained by the side of Capt. Smith until that portion of the big ship had been swept by water. Survivors of the crew who went down with the Titanic but were saved by clinging to an overturned lifeboat, today told of their gallant commander's efforts to save the life of one of the children. He died a sailor's death, and the little girl who had entrusted her life to his care died with him.

"He held the little girl under one arm," said James McGann, a fireman, "as he jumped into the sea and endeavored to reach the nearest lifeboat with the child. I took the other child into my arms as I was swept from the bridge deck. When I was plunged into the cold water I was compelled to release my hold on the child, and I am satisfied the same thing happened to Capt. Smith.

Boat Was Overturned.

"I had gone to the bridge deck to assist in lowering a collapsible boat. The water then was coming over the bridge, and we were unable to launch the boat promptly. It was overturned and was used as a life raft, some thirty or more of us, mostly firemen, clinging to it. Capt. Smith looked as though he was trying to keep back the tears as he thought of the doomed ship.

"He turned to the men lowering the boat and shouted: 'Well, boys, it's every man for himself.' He then took one of the children standing by him on the bridge, and jumped into the sea. He endeavored to reach the overturned boat, but did not succeed. That was the last I saw of Capt. Smith."

McGann said Capt. Smith directed the lowering of the lifeboats. He said the story that Capt. Smith had committed suicide as the Titanic was going down was without foundation.

TEACHERS TO TURN OUT BY THOUSANDS

Big Attendance at N. E. A. Expected in Spite of High Fares.

Milwaukee, Wis., April 20.—That many thousands of school teachers will attend the annual meeting of the National Educational association in Chicago next July from a purely educational motive was the statement of President Carroll G. Pearse in Milwaukee today.

President Pearse pointed to the absence of inducements in the way of reduced rates on railroads, but said an unusually large amount of interest was being shown in the convention by big increases in memberships. In Milwaukee alone, out of 1,300 teachers in the city 1,100 have joined the association. Chicago has promised a new membership of 6,000 and large additional accessions from Illinois.

While the program has not yet been completed the tentative makeup shows that many new departures in the line of educational features may be looked for. Many noted educators in various branches have accepted places on the program.

Steward of Titanic Takes Mrs. Guggenheim Word From Husband.

"I've Done My Best in Doing My Duty," Is the Message.

New York, April 20.—"If anything should happen to me, tell my wife in New York that I've done my best in doing my duty."

That was the last message of Benjamin Guggenheim, of the famous banking family, dictated to a steward only a short while before the banker sank to his death with the Titanic.

The message was delivered by James Etches, assistant steward in the first cabin of the Titanic. Etches appeared at the St. Regis hotel and inquired for Mrs. Benjamin Guggenheim. He said that he had a message from Benjamin Guggenheim. He consented to transmit the message through her brother-in-law.

Then the steward produced a piece of paper. He had written the message on it, he said, to be certain that it would be correct. The message was as given.

That's All He Said."

"That's all he said," added the steward, "there was not time for more."

"Mr. Guggenheim was one of my charges," said the steward. "He had his secretary with him. His name was Giglio, I believe, an Armenian, about

BACON SAILS ON NEW BOAT

Retiring Ambassador to Paris Starts for Home on the France.

Paris, April 20.—Robert Bacon, who recently resigned the post of American ambassador to France, and Mrs. Bacon departed this morning from Paris to Havre, where they will embark for the United States on board the new French line steamer France. Many friends, including Myron T. Herrick, the new ambassador, were at the station to bid them good-bye.

The official French delegation to the chaplain festivities departed at the same time and will sail with Mr. and Mrs. Bacon.

J. Dal Piaz, the general manager of the French line, who is also a passenger on the French steamer, this morning said that orders had been given to the captain to take the southern course and to adopt every measure of prudence.

More Than $50,000 Already in Relief Fund Started for Needy Survivors.

New York, April 20.—Nearly a week has passed since the Titanic, the greatest marine achievement in the history of the world, sank in mid-ocean. Much of her story is still untold, and many a day will pass before the world will fully realize or comprehend the significance of a disaster which must rank in many respects as the most stupendous in modern history.

The number of dead probably will never be exactly determined, inasmuch as the complete passenger list went down with the vessel. The number of survivors is fixed at 705 by the report of Capt. Rostron of the Carpathia. The White Star Line officials believe the death list totaled approximately 1,635.

The narratives, gathered piecemeal from the liner's survivors, pay a tribute without precedent to the bravery of the men and women of these modern days, a bravery of impulse, unstudied, unassuming and instinctive alike in steerage passenger, stoker and millionaire.

Services In Churches.

By common consent the churches of the world will set aside their pulpits tomorrow for a reverent consideration of the disaster and for mourning for the lost.

As to the needs of the living, ample provision is rapidly being made. The relief funds being gathered in New York and London already total well up into the hundreds of thousands. Most

NO WORD OF HOPE FROM OLYMPIC

Capt. Haddock Denies Having Sent Message That Titanic Was Afloat.

London, April 20.—Capt. Haddock of the White Star liner Olympic, on arriving at Plymouth this morning from New York, denied that the Olympic sent out a wireless report to the effect that the Allan line steamer Virginian was towing the Titanic and that all of the latter's passengers were safe.

The passengers of the Olympic, which is a sister ship of the ill-fated Titanic, subscribed $7,000 to the relief fund of the survivors.

'CARRY MORE BOATS'--ISMAY

Head of Mercantile Marine Issues Order to All Ships.

Makes Announcement at Session of Senate Inquiry.

New York, April 20. — J. Bruce Ismay and other officials of the White Star line were subpoenaed today by the senate investigation committee to appear before it in Washington at 10:30 Monday morning. The investigation in New York will be concluded today.

Just before the committee met today an invalid chair was wheeled into the committee room. In it was Harold Bride, the assistant wireless operator on the Titanic, whose feet were wrenched and badly injured when he was crushed on the life raft that picked him up from the wreckage. He was sallow and hollow-cheeked and lay propped up with pillows awaiting his call to the witness chair.

Immediately behind Bride came J. Bruce Ismay, president of the International Mercantile Marine, who was examined yesterday. He was accompanied by P. A. S. Franklin, vice president of the organization, counsel and detectives.

Mr. Ismay plainly showed the effects of the nervous strain under which he is laboring.

Mr. Ismay announced before the inquiry began that he had given instructions to all the lines of International Mercantile Marine, which include the

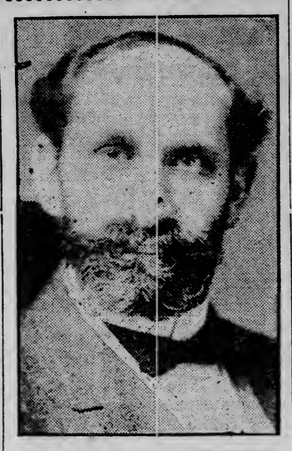
FRENCH LAW AS TO SAFETY IS STRICT

Shipping Companies Have Complained of Too Rigid Enforcement.

Paris, April 20.—The navigation department declares that the provisions of the French law in regard to life saving appliances are so much more rigorous than those of other nations that some of the French shipping companies have made complaints.



The government inspectors rigidly enforce the regulations as to safety appliances, and the law of 1908 forces steamers to carry lifeboats and rafts in proportion to their tonnage and the number of passengers. In the cases of steamers fitted with watertight compartments, however, the law is less strict.

HIS FIRST TRIP OF THE SEASON.

TWO HUNDRED ARE REPORTED DEAD IN MISSISSIPPI FLOODS

FIRST REFUGEE FROM THE TITANIC TO LAND

DR. HENRY N. FRAUENTHAL, Of New York, Who With His Bride of a Few Months, Was the First Survivor of the Titanic to Come Ashore When the Carpathia Docked Thursday Night.

Break in Levee at Beulah, Miss., Has Grown 2,000 Feet Wide.

Conditions Among Refugees Get Worse—Thousands Face Food Shortage.

At Least Forty Small Towns Are Completely Inundated.

Jackson, Miss., April 20.—Reports reached here today that 200 persons have been drowned in Bolivar county, Miss., by the flood that swept through that section when the river dikes broke near Beulah. Bolivar county is covered with water and efforts to verify the report are meeting with many obstacles.

The reports declare that many white persons were swept away by the deluge, although it is said the majority of victims were negroes who failed to reach high ground in time to get out of the flood's path.

Governor Earl Brewer was advised today there are 6,000 refugees in camp at Cleveland, and that the food supplies will last less than twenty-four hours.

Crevasse 2,000 Feet Wide.

Rosedale, Miss., April 20.—Rescue work continued today with an increased force of workers, boats going further inland and bringing out many residents who were marooned by the break in the Mississippi river dike at Beulah. The crevasse is now more than 2,000 feet wide, with the ends still caving.

Loss of Life Reported.

Greenville, Miss., April 20.—Fifteen persons are known to have been drowned during last night near Benoit in the flood that came from the levee break between Benoit and Beulah, Miss. Unverified reports of other and more extensive loss of life are being received here today. Because of the extent of the present flood, river observers express the opinion that the loss of life in this section of the delta will reach 200.

Whole Town Inundated.

Tallulah, La., April 20.—Water from the Dog-tail crevasse in the Mississippi river continues to rise here today. Every section of the town is inundated by water from two to ten feet deep. An appeal has been made to the flood relief committee at New Orleans for motor boats to be used in carrying relief to those marooned.

Two boat loads of provisions were distributed here yesterday, but there are many refugees here from the flooded plantations and the relief will only be temporary.

Conditions Growing Worse.

New Orleans, La., April 20.—Conditions in the overflowed territory of the Mississippi river in Southeastern Arkansas, Western Mississippi and Northern Louisiana are growing worse. The plight of victims made homeless by the flood is deplorable. Hundreds of these have been cared for at emergency camps established along the lines of the levees, but owing to the inaccessibility of some of the places far back in the interior there is much suffering due to the lack of food.

Forty Towns Inundated.

At least forty small towns have been inundated and it is certain many more will feel effects of the flood.

Business and traffic in the Yazoo delta, which is being overflowed by the break at Beulah, Miss., is paralyzed.

Beginning within the next few days, according to weather bureau forecasts, another rise will be recorded at Vicksburg and all points south, when the waters which are flowing through the Dogtail and Beulah breaks return to the Mississippi through the Red river.

CAMPAIGN IN PROGRESS

Booklet Will Be Sent Out Explaining Proposed Charter Amendments.

Societies, Clubs and Unions Are Asked to Indorse Them.

The committee which has charge of the campaign to have the amendment incorporating the initiative, referendum and recall as part of the city charter at the special election May 7, is sending out a large quantity of literature in the effort to roll up as large a majority as possible.

W. E. McEwen, general chairman, states that hundreds of letters are being sent out to all organizations in the city. These include the labor unions, which have furthered the movement for years; church societies and civic and improvement clubs of all kinds. The benefits to be derived from the adoption of the amendment are clearly and concisely set forth and there is no doubt but that these letters will have a considerable influence in determining the final vote.

Five thousand neat booklets, thoroughly explaining the three different propositions, will be sent out. Many people have not as yet a complete understanding of the amendment and this booklet will make it so plain that all will know exactly what its adoption is expected to accomplish.

Those in charge of the campaign wish to have an overwhelming victory to their credit, and judging from present sentiment in the city there is almost no question but what the amendment will be adopted. The coming election is considered important because of the bearing which it will have upon the adoption of the initiative, referendum and recall in other cities throughout the state.

Already many unions, clubs and societies have heartily indorsed the amendment and others will do so as the election draws nearer. The committee has not yet planned any series of public meetings, but will furnish speakers for any gathering which will call upon Mr McEwen or any member of the committee. If any public meetings are held they will not take place until just before the election.

FAVOR TREATIES ON SEA TRAFFIC

Washington, April 20.—The senate committee on foreign relations today agreed to recommend to the senate the adoption of the amended Martine resolution looking to international co-operation in the regulation of ocean traffic. It advises the president that the senate would favor treaties with the maritime powers regulating speed, routes and life saving and wireless equipment. Searchlights were especially recommended.

FEZ RETAKEN BY THE FRENCH

Many Killed and Injured in Desperate Fight at Moorish Capital.

Paris, April 20.—Fez, the capital of Morocco, which practically had fallen into the hands of the rioters and mutinous Moorish soldiers, has been recaptured by the French troops, numbering 2,000, stationed there, after a desperate battle, in which a large number were killed and injured. According to a wireless dispatch received from Fez at the foreign office this morning, order has been completely re-established.

OPPOSED TO A CARNIVAL

Commercial Club Does Not Favor Visit of Street Shows.

Congressman Miller Will Represent Club at Washington Meeting.

The West Duluth Commercial club at its meeting last evening went on record as being opposed to having any carnival company brought to West Duluth during the first week in July. This action was taken on request of a committee from the W. C. T. U. whose chairman stated that the West Duluth Fourth of July association is already planning to bring such an attraction to the city.

The petition from the women's organization stated that it is opposed to having a carnival in the city similar to the one held last year on the ground that a number of the shows given were of an immoral character and that the company took a large sum of money out of the city that would otherwise have remained here.

Congressman Clarence B. Miller informed the members that he has received the request to represent them at the national meeting of the Federation of Commercial clubs, which will meet in Washington, and would comply.

CONGRESSMAN C. B. MILLER, Who Will Represent the West Duluth Commercial Club at the Convention in Washington.

Next Friday evening was set aside by the club for holding a public meeting at which the supporters of the initiative, referendum and recall will present the question before West Duluth residents.

M. J. Fillatrault suggested that the club call the city engineering department's attention to the condition of Oneota street between Forty-seventh and Forty-ninth avenues. Some of this pavement is said to have been taken up by the Canadian Northern when constructing the Forty-ninth avenue bridge, but not replaced.

The club also passed a resolution asking the board of public works to compel constructors to dump surplus dirt in some of the ravines under brides instead of leaving it scattered about on the street.

A committee consisting of J. J. Frey, W. B. Getchell, David Sang, Charles Kauppi and W. A. Pond was appointed to see that work on the construction of the Getchell road was started early this year. The committee was instructed to take the matter up at once with the city and county authorities.

ACTIVITY IN WEST DULUTH

About 2,000 Men Now Employed in Factories and Mills.

About 2,000 men are at work at the present time in the various factories and furnaces in West Duluth.

With the opening of the spring season a large number of the men have ben hired in addition to the regular winter crews. Several of the smaller factories are now starting the night shifts. The Zenith Furnace company has not started work in the furnaces as yet on account of the repairs that are being made. About 400 more men will be hired in addition to the present crew of 350 as soon as the furnaces are ready for operation.

At the Alger Smith mill, which opened two weeks ago, 400 men are now at work in day and night shifts. The mill is in continuous operation and with the large supply of logs on hand from the winter's logging, is expected to run until the early part of December, when it will again close for the cold months.

Following is a list of the larger mills and factories of West Duluth giving the approximate number of men at work in each shop at the present time; Alger Smith mill, 400; National Iron company, 180; Standard Box & Lumber company, 65; Zenith Box & Lumber company, 60; American Carbolite company, 100; Duluth-Superior Dredging company, 25; Imperial Iron works, 50; Zenith Furnace company, 350 and the Nelson Sash & Door company, 25.

There are a number of smaller factories and shops, which employ from ten to fifty men throughout the year. These and the men at work on the Grassy Point bridge for the Northern Pacific company, will bring the approximate total close to 2,000 men, who are working in West Duluth mills and shops this spring.

AUTO BUS LINE TO PROCTOR

An auto bus which will carry thirty passengers, with a seating capacity of twenty-three, has been ordered at a cost of $6,000, and is expected to arrive about May 1. It will be in service about May 10, running hourly between Proctor and West Duluth. The car will leave Proctor on the hour, the first trip being 6 o'clock, returning from West Duluth at 7 o'clock. The West Duluth terminal will be the Cody hotel, Central avenue and Ramsey street.

The demand for a late conveyance from West Duluth to Proctor is said to be one of the reasons for the purchasing of this auto bus. A number of Proctor people are behind the project and it is expected that a charge of 20 cents will be made for the trip which is the price now charged by the Belt Line company. The route taken by the auto bus will be from the Proctor Y. M. C. A. on the Bay View Heights road, then on Highland street to Fifty-ninth, Fifty-ninth to Cody, Cody to Central and then to Ramsey street.

FIRE DESTROYS RESIDENCE.

Fire almost totally destroyed the frame residence of John Anderson, 309 South Sixtieth avenue west at 4:30 this morning.

When the fire department arrived the flames had gained considerable headway and before they could be extinguished the building, which was a story and a half frame structure, was destroyed. The damage amounted to $400 partly covered by insurance.

The cause of the fire is unknown.

LEARNING TO SEW.

For 2 cents a week, the dues, young girls of West Duluth learn to sew. Duluth club women are teaching the girls.

The 2 cents represent the weekly dues and are used to cover the expenses of needles and other material.

The club was formed for the purpose of bringing the girls of West Duluth who are under the age of 12, where they can learn to sew and also take up gymnasium work.

They meet every Saturday morning at 10 o'clock at 208 Central avenue and under the careful teaching of Miss Anders and Miss Willcuts the little girls are becoming quite expert in the art of sewing.

The club is only a month old and now has a membership of over forty.

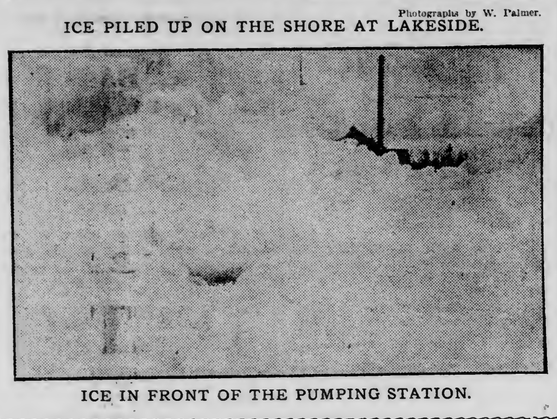
BODY OF LABORER FOUND IN DITCH

The police were informed yesterday afternoon that the body of a man had been found lying in the ditch along the tracks of the Brooks-Scanlon logging road about nine miles north of the farm of Dr. W. H. Magie.

The man was lying face downward, and to all appearances had been dead several days. No marks of violence were visible.



The body was seen by Frank Granley, a woodsman, who was walking to the city. He told the foreman of Dr. Magie's farm of his gruesome discovery. The foreman called up the police and the sheriff's office. Coroner McComb was notified and ordered the body brought to the city today, after which an investigation will be made to determine the cause of death. The body seemed to be that of a man 35 or 40 years old and was dressed in the clothes of a laboring man.

GLEANED ALONG THE POLICE RUN

The spectacle of a mere 12-year-old girl, already hardened, locked up with four other girls of doubtful character, was witnessed at headquarters this morning.

The youngest, still a child in years, appeared to be the least concerned of all. And the police say that she is no better than the others who are in custody with her.

"Does your mother know what you have been doing?" she was asked.

"Oh, she knows that I have been rooming downtown," she answered indifferently and even more coolly than many others much older than she have done in the past.

She was taken to the juvenile court, with two of the others. The trio will probably be sent to a correctional institution.

"I don't see what they want to send me away for," the small girl continued, "I'll be just as bad or worse when I get out. So it won't do any good to lock me up."

The girl gave her name as Anna Givens. The officials state that her mother is living in the city. Her present position is sufficient indictment of the home training which she has received.

The other two whose cases are being handled by the juvenile court are Etta Hines, who was arrested several nights ago in company with Elsie Roberts, and Mary Kotlarek. They are 16 years old. Questions put to the latter after she had been brought into the police station last evening, resulted in the arrest this morning of Joseph A. Kenney, a bartender in a Bowery saloon, on a charge of attempted rape. The girl said that she had been with him in the St. James hotel several nights ago. He waived examination and was bound over to await the action of the grand grand jury.

Mary came to the attention of the authorities some months ago when troubles of her family were aired in police court. At that time the girl's father claimed that he had no control of her, and that she sometimes stayed away all night or did not come home sometimes until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning.

The other two girls were Jessie Stranich and Priscilla Lyle, both 15 years old. They were picked up in the redlight district about 2 o'clock this morning by Sergeant John Roberg and locked up on charges of vagrancy.

Both pleaded guilty when arraigned in police court this morning. Each got $15 and costs or fifteen days in the county jail. Sentence in Priscilla's case was suspended, but a commitment was made out for the Stranich girl. The disposition just about tells their stories as they appeared to the court. Jessie has been known to the authorities for some time. She was one of the five girls who went to May Fisher's resort on the Cuyuna range last fall and was the complaining witness in the Fisher woman's trial.

Priscilla is a neat, well appearing girl with a pretty face. She said that her folks lived in Duluth until about 8 years ago, when she knew Jessie. She asserted that she came to Duluth from her home in Southern Minnesota to visit her. Until last night she claimed that her conduct had been proper in every respect. Last night she went downtown with Jessie and met two young men, who, she alleges, induced them to accompany them to the redlight district, visiting different resorts. The men who were with them were not arrested.

Dan Felix was an unfortunate victim of circumstances yesterday afternoon. The fire department, in running to the blaze on East Superior street, frightened a team attached to a butcher's wagon. Dashing up the hill, they ran into his big team on a van company's wagon. His horses were knocked down and became tangled in the harness. He had to cut and mutilate the harness, which was new, and in addition had a hard job to keep his team from running away. He left the wagon standing on the street while he took the team to the barn. In about an hour he returned with another team to take away the wagon. The wagon had been blocking the street, and when he appeared he was placed under arrest on that charge. The policeman had seen the runaway and didn't know the merits of the story told by Felix. He secured his release on bail, and when the facts had been ascertained by the court this morning, sentence was suspended.

The curiosity squad which visits police court regularly every morning when the grist is brought in, is curious. At least part of it is superlatively curious.

The benches occupied by the curious are in the back of the room, directly facing the windows. With all the curtains up, it is almost impossible for them to see what is going on, as the light strikes them directly in the eyes.

That was the case this morning. Along with the men the two girls who had been arrested for vagrancy were brought to the front of the courtroom. It was a shame, but no matter how hard they stretched their necks or squinted their eyes they couldn't see the feminine prisoners. Their disappointment was a sad thing. It was too bad that the unfortunate girls shouldn't be marched before them for the separate and individual inspection of each of them, and kept on exhibition until the last of them had looked them over to his complete satisfaction. Part of the curiosity squad comes in morning after morning and if the trial of some woman is announced standing room is at a premium. Probably the fact that they come around so often has convinced some of them that the court is conducted for the special purpose of satisfying the insatiable appetite which they have for witnessing cases of the kind which arose this morning.

One of them got so fearfully curious that he could not restrain himself. Apparently feeling that he had an inalienable right to see the two girls he called one of the court attaches to the front of the railing which divides the benches from the rest of the courtroom. He confidently informed the officer that the light interfered and that he couldn't see what was going on in the front room. Then he requested that the curtains be pulled so that he could see.

The curtains remained just as they were.

The state examining board will hold another examination for chauffeurs in Duluth, probably May 15. A large number of applications for licenses have been received from this part of the state and to save the applicants the expense of going to St. Paul the board will come here. The examination will probably be held in the council chambers.

Jailer John Hunter, who has been ill for several days, was on the job again today, greatly improved. Secretary Fred S. Johnson is still on the sick list. Patrolman John Link, part of whose foot was amputated some weeks ago, is still confined to his home, but he is well advanced on the road to recovery.

SUB-COMMITTEE HEARS INDIANS

(From The Herald Washington Bureau.)

Washington, April 20.—A delegation of Cass Lake Indians today was given a hearing before a sub-committee of the committee on Indian affairs, at which they urged the passage of the Lindbergh bill providing for the return of their allotments on the Cass Lake reservation and also for additional allotments of eighty acres each, such as have been given to Indians on the White Earth reservation.

It was claimed by the delegation that their original allotments were taken from them when the Minnesota national forest reserve was created, and they want them returned. The committee took no action.

IMMIGRATION BILL IS PASSED

Senate Raises Tax on Incoming Aliens to $5 for Each Person.

Washington, April 20.—The Dillingham immigration bill, with the educational test record in modfied form, passed the senate without division on the final vote. The test adopted requires that every male immigrant must read and write, and makes that provision applicable to immigrants from Canada and other countries of the Western hemisphere, who were excepted by the original bill. Religious refugees would be exempted.

Senator Williams of Mississippi moved to exclude all persons of African descent, but his amendment was lot, 28 to 25. Senator Root's amendment to provide for the deportation of aliens conspiring to overthrow governments was passed. This was said to be intended to apply especially to anti-Mexican agitators.

The Chinese exclusion law is incorporated n the general bill. The immigrant head tax is increased from $4 to $5. Reforms in the immigration service are provided.

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH HOME

IT IS wonderful how much satisfaction can be obtained from a talk over the Bell Telephone.

A letter carries words, but the Bell Service has been brought up to such a point of perfection that the modulations of the voice are clearly hard.

The cheery tones show that the talker is well and in good spirits. The call may come from a suburban village or a distant city, but within the limits of the carrying power of the voice the Bell Service carries the tone as well. You get a personal interview with a friend hundreds of miles away.

MARCONI SAYS TITANIC CARRIED THE VERY BEST OF WIRELESS EQUIPMENT

Testifies at Senate Inquiry Into the Wreck of the Liner.

Second Officer of Lost Liner Also Witness Before Senators.

Ismay and Others Refused Permission to Leave Country at Once.

WILLIAM MARCONI.

New York, April 20.—Marconi, inventor of wireless telegraphy and head of the system with which the Carpathia and other ocean steamers are quipped, was a witness yesterday afternoon before the sensational committee, investigating the wreck of the Titanic.

He said he was the chairman of the British Marconi company. Under instructions of the company, he said, operators must take their orders from the captain of the ship on which they are employed.

"Do the regulations prescribe whether one or two operators should be aboard the ocean vessels?"

"Yes. On ships like the late Titanic and the Olympic, two are carried," said Mr. Marconi. "The Carpathia wireless apparatus is a short distance equipment. The maximum efficiency of the Carpathia wireless, I should say, was 200 miles. The wireless equipment on the Titanic was available 500 miles during the daytime and 1,000 miles at night."

Had Best Wireless.

"Do you consider that the Titanic was equipped with the latest improved wireless apparatus?"

"Yes; I should say that it had the very best."

Senator Smith asked if amateur or rival concerns interferred with the wireless communication of the Carpathia.

"I am unable to say. Near New York I had an impression there was some slight interference, but when the Carpathia was farther out, in touch with New York and Nova Scotia, there was practically no interference."

"Did you hear the captain of the Carpathia say in his testimony that they caught this distress message from the Titanic almost providentially?" asked Senator Smith.

"Yes, I did. It was absolutely providential."

No "Absent" Signal.

"Is there any signal for the operator if he is not at his post?"

"I think there is none," said Marconi.

"Ought it not to be incumbent upon ships to have an operator always at the key?"

"Yes, but the ship owners don't like to carry two operators when they can get along with one. The smaller boat owners do not like the expense of two operators."

Only through the newspapers, he said, had he information about the Carpathia refusing to reply to a request of President Taft for news.

"I asked the operator last night and he told me he had never dreamed of such a thing."

That finished Mr. Marconi's testimony.

Charles Herbert Lightholder, second officer of the Titanic, followed Mr. Marconi on the stand. Mr. Lightholder said he understood the maximum speed of the Titanic as shown by its trial tests to have been 22 to 23 knots.

Senator Smith asked if the rule requiring lifesaving apparatus to be in each room for each passenger was complied with.

"Everything was complete," said Lightholder. Sixteen lifeboats, of which four were collapsible, were on the deck, he added. During the tests, he said, Capt. Clark of the British board of trade was aboard the Titanic to inspect its lifesaving equipment.

"How thorough are these captains of the board of trade in inspecting ships?" asked Senator Smith.

"Capt. Clark is so thorough that we called him a nuisance."

Lightholder said he was in the sea with a life belt on one hour and a half.

Didn't Leave the Ship.

"What time did you leave the ship?"

"I didn't leave it."

"Did it leave you?"

"Yes sir."

"Where were you when the Titanic sank?"

"In the officers' quarters."

"Were all the lifeboats gone then?"

"All but one. I was about fifteen feet from it. It was hanging in the tackle and they were trying to get it over the bulwarks the last time I saw it. The first officer, Mr. Murdock, who lost his life, was managing the tackle."

Saw Mr. Ismay.

"When did you see Mr. Ismay?"

"When we started to uncover the boats. He was standing on the boat deck."

"What was he doing?"

"Standing still."

"Was he fully dressed?"

"I couldn't say for sure; it was dark."

"When you saw Mr. Ismay twenty minutes after the collision, were there any other passengers near him?"

"I did not see anyone in particular," said Lightholder, "but there might have been some."

The witness described the collision as a "slight jar followed by a grinding sound."

Knew of Icebergs.

Lightholder said that on Sunday he saw a message from "some ship" about an iceberg ahead. He did not know the Amerika sent the message, he testified.

The ship was making about twenty-one to twenty-one and one-half knots, Lightholder testified. He understood this was not the best the ship could do.

"Did you have an ambition to see what the ship could make?" the witness was asked.

"Naturally, at some time."

"What was the weather that night?" asked Senator Smith.

"Clear and fair."

"Were you anxious about ice?"

"No, sir."

"And you put on no additional lookout?"

"No, sir."

Talked With Capt. Smith.

"When Capt. Smith came on the bridge at five minutes of nine, what was said?"

"We talked together generally for twenty to twenty-five minutes about when we might expect to get to the icefields. He left the bridge, I think, about twenty-five minutes after 9 o'clock, and during our talk he told me to keep the ship on her course, but that if I was in the slightest degree doubtful as to conditions, to let him know at once."

"Did you keep the Titanic on her course then?" Senator Smith asked.

"Yes."

"When did you next see Capt. Smith?"

"When I came out of the officers' quarters after the impact."

"Then Capt. Smith did not return to the bridge before your watch expired?"

"I did not see him."

"What time did you leave?"

"I turned over the watch to First Officer Murdock at 10 o'clock."

"Do you recall now just what the Titanic's position was when you turned over the watch to Murdock?"

Air Very Clear.

"I do not know, sir, but I did know at the time. We talked about the ice that we heard was afloat and I remember we agreed we should reach the reported longitude of the icefloes about 11 o'clock, an hour later. At that time the weather was clear and calm. I remember we talked about the distance we could see. We could see stars in the horizon. It was very clear."

"Did you see Murdock after that?"

"Yes. When I came out of the officers' quarters, after the impact, Murdock was on the bridge, he on one side and Capt. Smith on the other. I never spoke to Murdock after I turned over the watch to him. I saw him later working over the last lifeboat as the ship went down.

"I was busy at my own work, about fifty feet away, and have a recollection of seeing the captain walking across the bridge. I did not then hear him give any orders. I was too far away."

"When the Titanic sank were her decks intact?"

"Absolutely intact," said Lightholder.

Smith's Last Order to Him.

Senator Smith asked what was the last order he heard Capt. Smith give.

"When I asked if I should put the women and children in the boats," replied Lightholder, "he responded, 'Yes, and lower away.'"

"What did you do?"

"Obeyed orders."

The last boat, a collapsible, to put off was the one on top of the officers' quarters, Lightholder said. Men jumped upon it as the deck and waited for the water to float it off. Once at sea, it upset. The forward funnel fell into the water, just missing the raft and overturning it. The funnel probably killed persons in the water.

"This was the boat I eventually got on," declared Lightholder. "No one was on it when I reached it. Later about thirty men clambered out of the water onto it. All had on life preservers."

Thayer Was on Raft.

"Did any passengers get on?" asked Senator Smith.

"J. B. Thayer, the second Marconi operator, and Col. Gracie, I recall," said the witness. "All the rest were firemen taken out of the water. Two of these died that night and slipped off into the water. I think the senior Marconi operator did that."

"Died from cold?"

"Yes, sir."

"Was there any effort by others to get on board?" continued Senator Smith.

"We took all we could."

"There must have been others in the water?"

"But not near us."

"How far away?"

"Seemed half a mile."

"Who took command?"

"I did, as far as necessary."

Saw No Women or Children.

"When you left did you see any women or children on board?"

"No, sir."

"Any passengers on the so-called boat deck?"

"A number."

An error in his testimony was corrected by the witness saying there were twenty lifeboats, four of which were collapsible. One boat stuck in its tackle and never got off.

"How were the passengers selected to fill the boats?"

"By sex."

"Who determined who should go?"

"I did."

"How?"

"Whenever I saw a woman I put her in, except stewardesses. I turned those back."

Women Refused to Go.

'Did you attempt to get women to go who would not?"

"Yes."

"Why would they not go?"

"I hadn't time to learn."

"Did any ask for their family to go?"

"Yes, one or two."

"Did any families go?"

"No."

In the first boat to be put off, Lightholder said he put 20 to 25. Two seamen were placed in it. The officer said he could spare no more, and that the fact that women rowed did not show the boat was not fully equipped.

At that time he did not believe the danger was great. Two seamen placed in the boat, he said, were selected by him, but he could not recall who they were.

"How did you happen to name them?"

"Because they were standing near."

"Did they want to go?"

"I did not ask them; they went by my orders."

"How many passengers did the second boat take?"

"About 30, two men as far as I remember, sir."

"Did you see that boat again?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"The third boat?"

Realized Seriousness.

"By the time I came to the third boat—all these were on the port side—I began to realize that the situation was serious, and I began to take chances."

"How long did all the work of loading and lowering a lifeboat take?"

"It was difficult to say, but I think about fifteen or twenty minutes."

"How many passengers did the third boat contain?"

"I filled her up as full as I dared, sir, then lowered her, about 35, I think. The women and children could not have stood quieter if they'd been in church."

In loading the fourth lifeboat Lightholder said he was running short of seamen.

First Man Passenger to Go.

"I put two seamen in and one jumped out. That was the first boat I had to put a man passenger in. He was standing nearby and said he would go if I needed him.

"I said, 'are you a sailor?' and he replied that he was a yachtsman. Then I told him that if he was sailor enough to get over the bulwarks to the lifeboat to go ahead. He did and proved himself afterward to be a very brave man."

"Who was he—did you know him?"

"I didn't know him then, but afterwards I looked him up. He was Maj. Peuchen of Toronto," said Lightholder.

"Had you ever seen him before?"

"Never."

Of the fifth boat Lightholder had no particular recollection.

Started Six Boats.

"The last boat I put out, my sixth boat," he said, "we had difficulty finding women. I called for women and none was on deck. The men began to get in—and then the women appeared. As rapidly as they did, the men passengers got out of the boat again.

"The boat's deck was only ten feet from the water when I lowered the sixth boat. When we lowered the first, the distance to the water was seventy feet."

All told, Lightholder testified, 210 members of the crew were saved.

"If the same course was pursued on the starboard side as you pursued on the port, in filling boats, how do you account for so many members of the crew being saved?" asked Chairman Smith.

"I have inquired especially, and have found that for every six persons picked up, five were either firemen or stewards."

Some lifeboats, the witness said, went back after the Titanic sank, and picked up men from the sea.

Blown From Ship.

Lightholder declared he stood on top the officers' quarters, and as the ship and held there," testified the officer.

"I was sucked against the blower and held there," testified the officer.

"Head above water?"

"No, sir. A terrific gust came up the blower; the boiler must have exploded—and I was blown clear."

"How far were you blown?"

"Barely clear. I was sucked down again, this time on the 'fidley' grating."

"Did anyone else have a similar experience?"

"Yes, Col. Gracie."

"How did you get loose?"

"I don't know; maybe another explosion. All I know is we came up by a boat."

Water-tight Compartments.

"Were there any water-tight compartments on that ship?" the senator asked.

"Certainly—forty or fifty."

"Were they known to passengers and crew?"

"Must have been—by the plans distributed about the ship."

"Do you know whether any of the crew or passengers took to these water-tight compartments as a last resort?"

"It is quite impossible for me to say, sir."

"Is it at all likely?"

"I think very unlikely."

"As for yourself, you preferred to take to the open sea?"

"Undoubtedly."

"Are the water-tight compartments intended as a refuge for passengers?"

"Oh, dear no, sir—not at any time."

"Suppose this ship had sunk in less depth of water, would the water-tight compartments have been any refuge?"

"No, sir; never intended for that purpose—they were designed to prevent the ship from sinking."

Officers Who Survived.

"What other officers besides yourself survived?"

"The third, fourth and fifth officers, sir."

"Their names?"

"H. J. Pittman, third officer; J. G. Boxhall, fourth officer; G. Lowe, fifth officer."

At this point the hearing was halted to be resumed at night.

Thomas Cottam, aged 21, of Liverpool, Marconi operator on the Carpathia, was the first witness at the evening session.

He denied himself some glory by saying he had no stated hours for labor on the Carpathia. Previous witnesses had testified he was "on duty" when he received the Titanic's signal for help. He was decidedly uncertain whether he was required to work at night, finally saying it depended on whether he had commercial or ship's business to get off.

Mrs. Straus' Death.

How Mrs. Isidor Straus refused to leave her husband and live was told the committee by Alfred Crawford of Southampton, bedroom steward on the Titanic.

He said Mrs. Straus told her maid to get into a lifeboat to which Crawford was assigned.

"Mrs. Straus put her one foot into the boat and then changed her mind. Mr. Straus was standing away, back from her. She said to him: 'We have been living together for many, many years, we are not going to separate now.'"

The seriousness of the inquiry by the senate investigating committee into the Titanic disaster was disclosed when Senator Smith of Michigan, the chairman, at first flatly refused to let any of the officers or the 200 members of the crew of the stricken steamship get beyond the jurisdiction of the United States government. The men were all to have sailed today on the steamer Lapland. It was settled later that the greater part of the crew would be permitted to sail on the steamer, but that the twelve men and four officers among the survivors now under subpoena, together with Mr. Ismay, would not be allowed to depart.

The intention of the committee was made clear at adjournment when, with Alfred Crawford, a steward on the stand, Senator Smith pleaded weariness.

Planned to Sail.

"We have been at this all day and into the night," he said, "and I believe we had better cease until tomorrow. I am not through with Mr. Crawford yet and would like to question him further tomorrow, together with other members of the crew and the officers."

C. C. Burlingham, counsel for the White Star line, interposed.

"There are 200 men who are to sail tomorrow," he said. "Surely the committee does not intend to hold them? We are perfectly willing to pledge the presence of the four officers and the twelve men desired by the committee, but these men are entitled to return to their homes."

"They Cannot Go."

"I am not prepared to admit that," said the senator. "We cannot say whom we may want, and they cannot go."

"We cannot care for them, then," retorted Mr. Burlingham. "When the Lapland sails we shall cease to be responsible for them. If the committee desires to herd them up, very well, but it cannot expect the steamship company to care for them except to the extent of transporting them back to their homes."

Senator Smith declined to recede from his position at that time. The committee then adjourned until this morning. At a conference later the decision to let the men go except those under subpoena was reached.

It was explained at the conference that Mr. Ismay was very anxious to leave at once for Europe, as he had been worn out by his experiences and felt the need of returning quickly to his English home for a rest. His pleas, however, were unavailing.

Nervous, but not in tears, as was Capt. Rostron of the rescue ship Carpathia, who followed him on the stand, Mr. Ismay told in whispers of his escape from the sinking liner, from the time he pushed away in a boat with the women, until he found himself, clad in his pajamas, aboard the Carpathia.

Denied Censoring Messages.

He was not sure in just what boat he left the Titanic, nor was he sure how long he remained on the liner after she struck. He added, however, that before he entered the lifeboat he had been told that there were no women on the deck, and he denied that there had been any censoring of messages from the Carpathia. Other witnesses, including Capt. Rostron, bore him out in this, with the explanation that the lone wireless operator on the rescue ship, swamped with personal messages, was unable to send matter for the press.

Interest second only to that in the tales of survivors, centered upon Mr. Ismay's recital.

Left Usual Course.

From Washington also came the opinion of expert hydrographers that no blame should attach to Capt. Smith because, as they contend, analysis of ocean charts has shown that the skipper, warned of the presence of icebergs, had steered the Titanic fully sixty miles southward from the regular course. In spite of this caution, the mass of ice was struck, and as a preventative of similar disasters the hydrographic office in New York issued its order shifting the lines of trans-Atlantic liners 180 miles southward from the path which the Titanic followed.

After giving testimony, Capt. Rostron of the Carpathia took charge of his ship, which departed for the Mediterranean. The vessel left with cabins full. Capt. Rostron went as he told how the Carpathia had picked up the unfortunates set adrift from the Titanic, and before he left on his ship, admiring passengers presented him with a loving cup.

WILL RETURN MEMBERS OF CREW TO ENGLAND.

New York, April 20.—Preparations have been made by the White Star line for the return passage to England of the 202 survivors of the Titanic crew. According to Stafford Wright, superintendent of the Seamen's Christian association, who was called in by the White Star officials to distribute clothing to the members of the crew, there will be 182 men and 20 women to make the trip. Relatives of all these survivors have been notified by cable that the latter are safe and will be home within a week.

There are many exciting experiences related by the members of the crew, nearly all tallying as to details of the catastrophe.

IMMIGRATION BILL IS PASSED

Senate Raises Tax on Incoming Aliens to $5 for Each Person.

Washington, April 20.—The Dillingham immigration bill, with the educational test record in modified form, passed the senate without division on the final vote. The test adopted requires that every male immigrant must read and write, and makes that provision applicable to immigrants from Canada and other countries of the Western hemisphere, who were excepted by the original bill. Religious refugees would be exempted.

Senator Williams of Mississippi moved to exclude all persons of African descent, but his amendment was lot, 28 to 25. Senator Root's amendment to provide for the deportation of aliens conspiring to overthrow governments was passed. This was said to be intended to apply especially to anti-Mexican agitators.

The Chinese exclusion law is incorporated n the general bill. The immigrant head tax is increased from $4 to $5. Reforms in the immigration service are provided.

MARCONI SAYS TITANIC CARRIED THE VERY BEST OF WIRELESS EQUIPMENT

Testifies at Senate Inquiry Into the Wreck of the Liner.

Second Officer of Lost Liner Also Witness Before Senators.

Ismay and Others Refused Permission to Leave Country at Once.

WILLIAM MARCONI.

New York, April 20.—Marconi, inventor of wireless telegraphy and head of the system with which the Carpathia and other ocean steamers are quipped, was a witness yesterday afternoon before the sensational committee, investigating the wreck of the Titanic.

He said he was the chairman of the British Marconi company. Under instructions of the company, he said, operators must take their orders from the captain of the ship on which they are employed.

"Do the regulations prescribe whether one or two operators should be aboard the ocean vessels?"

"Yes. On ships like the late Titanic and the Olympic two are carried," said Mr. Marconi. "The Carpathia wireless apparatus is a short distance equipment. The maximum efficiency of the Carpathia wireless, I should say, was 200 miles. The wireless equipment on the Titanic was available 500 miles during the daytime and 1,000 miles at night."

Had Best Wireless.

"Do you consider that the Titanic was equipped with the latest improved wireless apparatus?"

"Yes; I should say that it had the very best."

Senator Smith asked if amateur or rival concerns interferred with the wireless communication of the Carpathia.

"I am unable to say. Near New York I had an impression there was some slight interference, but when the Carpathia was farther out, in touch with New York and Nova Scotia, there was practically no interference."

"Did you hear the captain of the Carpathia say in his testimony that they caught this distress message from the Titanic almost providentially?" asked Senator Smith.

"Yes, I did. It was absolutely providential."

No "Absent" Signal.

"Is there any signal for the operator if he is not at his post?"

"I think there is none," said Marconi.

"Ought it not to be incumbent upon ships to have an operator always at the key?"

"Yes, but the ship owners don't like to carry two operators when they can get along with one. The smaller boat owners do not like the expense of two operators."

Only through the newspapers, he said, had he information about the Carpathia refusing to reply to a request of President Taft for news.

"I asked the operator last night and he told me he had never dreamed of such a thing."

That finished Mr. Marconi's testimony.

Charles Herbert Lightholder, second officer of the Titanic, followed Mr. Marconi on the stand. Mr. Lightholder said he understood the maximum speed of the Titanic as shown by its trial tests to have been 22 to 23 knots.

Senator Smith asked if the rule requiring lifesaving apparatus to be in each room for each passenger was complied with.

"Everything was complete," said Lightholder. Sixteen lifeboats, of which four were collapsible, were on the deck, he added. During the tests, he said, Mr. Clark of the British board of trade was aboard the Titanic to inspect its lifesaving equipment.

"How thorough are these captains of the board of trade in inspecting ships?" asked Senator Smith.

"Capt. Clark is so thorough that we called him a nuisance."

Lightholder said he was in the sea with a life boat on one hour and a half.

Didn't Leave the Ship.

"What time did you leave the ship?"

"I didn't leave it."

"Did it leave you?"

"Yes sir."

"Where were you when the Titanic sank?"

"In the officers' quarters."

"Were all the lifeboats gone then?"

"All but one. I was about fifteen feet from it. It was hanging in the tackle and they were trying to get it over the bulwarks the last time I saw it. The first officer, Mr. Murdock, who lost his life, was managing the tackle."

Saw Mr. Ismay.

"When did you see Mr. Ismay?"

"When we started to uncover the boats. He was standing on the boat deck."

"What was he doing?"

"Standing still."

"Was he fully dressed?"

"Was he fully dressed?"

"I couldn't say for sure; it was dark."

"When you saw Mr. Ismay twenty minutes after the collision, were there any other passengers near him?"

"I did not see anyone in particular," said Lightholder, "but there might have been some."

The witness described the collision as a "slight jar followed by a grinding sound."

Knew of Icebergs.

Lightholder said that on Sunday he saw a message from "some ship" about an iceberg ahead. He did not know the Amerika sent the message, he testified.

The ship was making about twenty-one to twenty-one and one-half knots, Lightholder testified. He understood this was not the best the ship could do.

"Did you have an ambition to see what the ship could make?" the witness was asked.

"Naturally, at some time."

"What was the weather that night?" asked Senator Smith.

"Clear and fair."

"Were you anxious about ice?"

"No, sir."

"And you put on no additional lookout?"

"No, sir."

Talked With Capt. Smith.

"When Capt. Smith came on the bridge at five minutes of nine, what was said?"

"We talked together generally for twenty to twenty-five minutes about when we might expect to get to the icefields. He left the bridge, I think, about twenty-five minutes after 9 o'clock, and during our talk he told me to keep the ship on her course, but that if I was in the slightest degree doubtful as to conditions, to let him know at once."

"Did you keep the Titanic on her course then?" Senator Smith asked.

"Yes."

"When did you next see Capt. Smith?"

"When I came out of the officers' quarters after the impact."

"Then Capt. Smith did not return to the bridge before your watch expired?"

"I did not see him."

"What time did you leave?"

"I turned over the watch to First Officer Murdock at 10 o'clock."

"Do you recall now just what the Titanic's position was when you turned over the watch to Murdock?"

Air Very Clear.

"I do not know, sir, but I did know at the time. We talked about the ice that we heard was afloat and I remember we agreed we should reach the reported longitude of the icefloes about 11 o'clock, an hour later. At that time the weather was clear and calm. I remember we talked about the distance we could see. We could see stars in the horizon. It was very clear."

"Did you see Murdock after that?"

"Yes. When I came out of the officers' quarters, after the impact, Murdock was on the bridge, he on one side and Capt. Smith on the other. I never spoke to Murdock after I turned over the watch to him. I saw him later working over the last lifeboat as the ship went down.

"I was busy at my own work, about fifty feet away, and have a recollection of seeing the captain walking across the bridge. I did not then hear him give any orders. I was too far away."

"When the Titanic sank were her decks intact?"

"Absolutely intact," said Lightholder.

Smith's Last Order to Him.

Senator Smith asked what was the last order he heard Capt. Smith give.

"When I asked if I should put the women and children in the boats," replied Lightholder, "he responded, 'Yes, and lower away.'"

"What did you do?"

"Obeyed orders."

The last boat, a collapsible, to put off was the one on top of the officers' quarters, Lightholder said. Men jumped upon it as it was lowered and when he received the Titanic's signal for help. He was decidedly uncertain whether he was required to work at night, finally saying it depended on whether he had commercial or ship's business to get off.

Mrs. Straus' Death.

How Mrs. Isidor Straus refused to leave her husband and live was told the committee by Alfred Crawford of Southampton, bedroom steward on the Titanic.

He said Mrs. Straus told her maid to get into a lifeboat to which Crawford was assigned.

"Mrs. Straus put her one foot into the boat and then changed her mind. Mr. Straus was standing away, back from her. She said to him: 'We have been living together for many, many years, we are not going to separate now.'"

The seriousness of the inquiry by the senate investigating committee into the Titanic disaster was disclosed when Senator Smith of Michigan, the chairman, at first flatly refused to let any of the officers or the 200 members of the crew of the sunken steamship get beyond the jurisdiction of the United States government. The men were all to have sailed today on the steamer Lapland. It was settled later that the greater part of the crew would be permitted to sail on the steamer, but that the twelve men and four officers among the survivors now under subpoena, together with Mr. Ismay, would not be allowed to depart.

The intention of the committee was made clear at adjournment when, with Alfred Crawford, a steward on the stand, Senator Smith pleaded weariness.

Planned to Sail.

"We have been at this all day and into the night," he said, "and I believe we had better cease until tomorrow. I am not through with Mr. Crawford yet and would like to question him further tomorrow, together with other members of the crew and the officers."

C. C. Burlingham, counsel for the White Star line, interposed.

"There are 200 men who are to sail tomorrow," he said. "Surely the committee does not intend to hold them? We are perfectly willing to pledge the presence of the four officers and the twelve men desired by the committee, but these men are entitled to return to their homes."

"They Cannot Go."

"I am not prepared to admit that," said the senator. "We cannot say whom we may want, and they cannot go."

"We cannot care for them, then," retorted Mr. Burlingham. "When the Lapland sails we shall cease to be responsible for them. If the committee desires to herd them up, very well, but it cannot expect the steamship company to care for them except to the extent of transporting them back to their homes."

Senator Smith declined to recede from his position at that time. The committee then adjourned until this morning. At a conference later the decision to let the men go except those under subpoena was reached.

It was explained at the conference that Mr. Ismay was very anxious to leave at once for Europe, as he had been worn out by his experiences and felt the need of returning quickly to his English home for a rest. His pleas, however, were unavailing.

Nervous, but not in tears, as was Capt. Rostron of the rescue ship Carpathia, who followed him on the stand, Mr. Ismay told in whispers of his escape from the sinking liner, from the time he pushed away in a boat with the women, until he found himself, clad in his pajamas, aboard the Carpathia.

Denied Censoring Messages.

He was not sure in just what boat he left the Titanic, nor was he sure how long he remained on the liner after she struck. He added, however, that before he entered the lifeboat he had been told that there were no women on the deck, and he denied that there had been any censoring of messages from the Carpathia. Other witnesses, including Capt. Rostron, bore him out in this, with the explanation that the lone wireless operator on the rescue ship, swamped with personal messages, was unable to send matter for the press.

Interest second only to that in the tales of survivors, centered upon Mr. Ismay's recital.

From Washington also came the opinion of expert hydrographers that no blame should attach to Capt. Smith because, as they contend, analysis of ocean charts has shown that the skipper, warned of the presence of icebergs, had steered the Titanic fully sixty miles southward from the regular course. In spite of this caution, the mass of ice was struck, and as a preventative of similar disasters the hydrographic office in New York issued its order shifting the lines of trans-Atlantic liners 180 miles southward from the path which the Titanic followed.

After giving testimony, Capt. Rostron of the Carpathia took charge of his ship, which departed for the Mediterranean. The vessel left with cabins full. Capt. Rostron wept as he told how the Carpathia had picked up the unfortunates set adrift from the Titanic, and before he left on his ship, admiring passengers presented him with a loving cup.

WILL RETURN MEMBERS OF CREW TO ENGLAND.

New York, April 20.—Preparations have been made by the White Star line for the return passage to England of the 202 survivors of the Titanic crew. According to Stafford Wright, superintendent of the Seamen's Christian association, who was called in by the White Star officials to distribute clothing to the members of the crew, there will be 182 men and 20 women to make the trip. Relatives of all these survivors have been notified by cable that the latter are safe and will be home within a week.

There are many exciting experiences related by the members of the crew, nearly all tallying as to details of the catastrophe.

CALLS ISMAY COWARD AND A MURDERER

Senator Rayner Delivers Vigorous Attack on British Ship Owner.

Claims Senate Has Power to Compel Britons to Testify.

Demands That Justice Be Done on Officials of Steamship Line.

Washington, April 20.—It was an indictment rarely equalled in its vigor, directed against J. Bruce Ismay, managing director, and other officials of the White Star line, holding them responsible for the Titanic disaster, that was delivered in the senate yesterday by Senator Rayner of Maryland, who pictured Ismay as "the officer primarily responsible for the whole disaster, who has reached his destination in safety and unharmed."

Senator Rayner pointed out that while there were no civil nor criminal remedies available in the American courts, criminal and civil suits could be brought in the British courts; that a congressional committee would have absolute authority to subpoena every one connected with the disaster, and that if any one should refuse to answer questions, he could be indicted and imprisoned for contempt.

"It Was Cowardly."

"Mr. Ismay claims, according to reports, that he took the last lifeboat," cried Senator Rayner. "I do not believe it, and if he did, it was cowardly to take any lifeboat, for the managing director of the line, with his board, is criminally responsible for this appalling tragedy.

"If this had happened on an American vessel, there would be no question that an indictment would be found, and if the facts were sustained, the officers of the company would be convicted of manslaughter, if not of murder, because the evidence is clear that the vessel was not properly equipped with efficient life-saving apparatus.

"I have not the slightest doubt that the Northern route was taken in obedience to Mr. Ismay's direct orders, and that, with full warning, he risked the life of his entire ship to make a speedy passage.

Ismay "Primarily Responsible."

"I care not what are the rules of the British admiralty. Here you have the spectacle of the head of the line failing to see that his ship was equipped properly with life-saving apparatus, heedless of the warnings that he was sailing in a dangerous sea, forsaking his vessel and permitting 1,500 of her passengers and crew to be swallowed by the sea. The martyrdom and the agonies of separation that took place on board the sinking ship are too fearful for me to dwell on and contemplate, but Mr. Ismay, the officer primarily responsible for the whole disaster, has reached his destination in safety and unharmed.

"No legislation can bring back to earth a single life lost upon that fatal night. What we can do is to help fix the responsibility, if possible, and rely upon justice to bring to bay the guilty directorate of this company.

Culpable Carelessness.

"All civilized nations will applaud the criminal prosecution of the management of this line. If they can be made to suffer no sympathy will go out for them, and if it does it will be submerged in the overwhelming lamentation that today re-echoes throughout the civilized world, for the victims of their culpable carelessness—a recklessness that sent hundreds of their fellow beings into eternity, despoiling homes and firesides, and turned this land into a house of mourning.

"In this hour of our calamity we appeal to the majesty of the law to deal out retributory justice to this guilty company to the last degree."

Two more bills framed on the lessen drawn from the Titanic disaster were introduced in the house. One of them, by Representative O'Shaughnessy of Rhode Island, would compel all oceangoing steamships to or from the United States to carry constant and adequate wireless equipment. Representative Parran of Maryland offered a measure to appropriate $100,000 for naval target practice is destroying icebergs by the guns of the warships or dropping explosives from airships.

SAW CAPT. SMITH LEAP INTO OCEAN

Mrs. Widener, Who Lost Husband and Son, Tells of Titanic Tragedy.

Philadelphia, April 20.—Describing her experiences when the Titanic sank, Mrs. George D. Widener, whose husband, a wealthy financier of this city, and their son, were drowned, said she had seen Capt. Smith of the liner jump from the bridge into the sea, and that a moment previous she had seen another officer turn a revolver upon himself and send a bullet into his brain.

"Mr. Widener and I had retired to our cabin for the night," she said, "when the shock of crashing into the iceberg occurred. We thought little of it and did not leave our cabin. We must have remained there an hour before becoming fearful. Then Mr. Widener went to our son Harry's room and brought him to our cabin. A short time later Harry went to the deck and hurried back and told us we must go on deck.

Last She Saw of Husband.

"Mr. Widener and Harry a few minutes later went on deck and aided the officers, who then were having trouble with those in the steerage. That was the last I saw of my husband and son.

"I went on deck and was put into a lifeboat. As the boat pulled away from the Titanic I saw one of the officers shoot himself in the head, and a few minutes later saw Capt. Smith jump from the bridge into the sea."

Mr. Widener and his son Harry are among the victims of the disaster.

Mrs. Widener is at her home at Elkins Park, Pa., near here. The entire Widener family, which is among the most prominent in Philadelphia's financial and social circles, is overcome by the disaster. The family has received messages of sympathy from all parts of the world.

MILLIONAIRE'S WIDOW IN DELICATE HEALTH

MRS. J. J. ASTOR.

New York, April 20.—While utterly exhausted from her experiences, Mrs. John Jacob Astor is declared by Nicholas Biddle, a trustee of the Astor estate, to be in no danger whatever.

On landing from the Carpathia, the young bride, widowed by the Titanic's sinking, told members of her family what she could recall of the circumstances of the disaster. It was her belief that all the women who wished to go had then been taken off. Her impression was that the boat she left in had room for at least fifteen more persons.

While Mrs. Astor was in a highly excited condition, she managed to greet her own father and mother without as much hysterical display as many of the other passengers. She was assisted into an auto and driven to the Astor home at 849 Fifth avenue. Once within the house, it was reported by members of the family that she collapsed, but rallied in a few moments.

Mrs. Astor, because of her condition, was given the captain's cabin for the trip home, and was given the best care possible.

ISMAY DENIES DOING WRONG

Briton Calls Senate Committee's Inquiry Methods "Brutally Unfair."

Says He Sought No Chance to Escape But Took It as It Came.

New York, April 20.—J. Bruce Ismay discussed with interviewers today the work of the senate investigating committee, which he characterized as "brutally unfair." He said:

"I cannot understand this senatorial inquiry. They are going at it in a manner that seems unjust, and the injustice lies heaviest upon me. Why, I cannot even protect myself by having my counsel ask questions. Don't misunderstand me by thinking I mean questions calculated to twist witnesses up. On the contrary, questions intended to simplify involved meanings."

Discussing his departure from the Titanic, Mr. Ismay said:

"I have searched my mind with deepest care. I have thought long over each single incident that I could recall. I am sure that I did nothing that I should not have done. My conscience is clear and I have not been a lenient judge of my acts.

Sought No Chance to Escape.

"I tell you that if I thought that in the slightest way I had done anything wrong I would never have another happy moment. I took the chance of escape when it came to me—I did not seek it. Every woman and child had been cared for before I left the boat.

"And more, all the men within reach had been taken care of before I took my turn. And why shouldn't I take my turn? There are only two classes on a ship—the crew and the passengers. I was a passenger.

"It is true I am president of the company, but I didn't consider myself any different from the rest of the passengers. I took no other man's place."

FORMER COKATO PASTOR AMONG TITANIC'S DEAD.

Cokato, Minn., April 20.—Rev. William Leathenen, formerly pastor of the Finnish church near this place, and his wife were among the passengers of the illfated White Star steamer Titanic, and their friends here have been anxiously searching the press reports of those who were saved. Among the names given is that of Mrs. Leathenen and it appears certain her husband found a watery grave. They were returning from a visit to Finland and expected to locate in Minneapolis.

RICE RATES RULED UPON.

Washington, April 20.—In a series of decisions issued today by the interstate commerce commission respecting the transportation of rice from points of origin in Texas to destinations in many other states it was held:

Through carload rates to destinations in the Southeastern territory should be 5 cents a hundred pounds less than the lowest combination of local rates.

Rail and water rates on rice from Houston to Boston, New York and other Eastern cities are not discriminatory as compared with the rates from New Orleans and Galveston.

Uniform rates on rough and clear rice from Texas points to New Orleans do not constitute undue discrimination against New Orleans rice millers.

GARAGE IS DESTROYED

Five Injured and $30,000 Property Loss in Afternoon Fire.

Gasoline Explosions Cause Flames to Spread With Great Rapidity.

Two firemen and three bystanders were injured and a heavy property loss sustained in the fire which gutted the building at 316 East Superior street yesterday afternoon. Scores of others had narrow escapes from flying bricks and debris.

The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to have started between the wooden partitions in the basement. Gasoline explosions spread the flames with great rapidity and when the fire department arrived the whole interior was a roaring furnace.

Several explosions occurred, said to have been both from gasoline and acetylene gas tanks, a number of which were in the building.

The blaze was spectacular. The force of the explosions and the heat crumbled the east wall and the Michigan street wall and the roof crashed in. The flames consumed the supports of the upper annex of the Hotel Angelterr next to it, and that also sank down, being consumed with the contents, including the personal effects of twenty-five roomers, many of them young women.

The loss is estimated at $30,000. That to the building and the hotel is figured at about $20,000, with the balance on the contents. The damage is well covered by insurance.

The Michigan street floor was occupied by Walter H. Healy's auto livery, Buck & Spring's welding and cutting establishment and the Northwestern Cadillac company's auto repair department. The Superior street floor was occupied by two automobile concerns, the Northwestern Cadillac company and the E. M. F. agency.

Onlookers in Danger.

The huge volumes of dense smoke, the crashing of the walls and roofs and the explosions rapidly attracted a crowd which blocked the streets for hundreds of feet on both sides, tying up all kinds of traffic for over an hour. The police fought to keep the sightseers from endangering their lives and received many compliments for their effectiveness in this direction.

Of the five struck by the missles none was dangerously hurt.

Walter Kilgore of 105 East Eighth street, of No. 4 fire hall, was picked up unconscious. He had been struck in the head with a flying brick. He was hurried to St. Mary's hospital, where an examination failed to disclose any broken bones.

Elmer Swanman of 23 West Fourth street, attached to No. 3 truck, was cut about the head and shoulders by flying glass. He was removed to his home.

Rupert Smith, 326 East First street, doorkeeper at the Orpheum theater, sustained a broken ankle when knocked down by a fire horse. He was taken to St. Mary's hospital.

James Walsh, the 10-year-old son of Mrs. Mary Walsh, police matron, received a bad gash on the left arm from a flying piece of glass.

William Emerson of the Holland hotel was slightly cut about the head and neck by fragments of brick as he was running his car out of the Michigan street entrance.

Cars Are Saved.

Much courage and self possession were shown in saving the cars in the establishment. Only partial success attended the attempt on the Michigan street floor, but all those on the Superior street floor were taken out in safety.

On the Michigan street floor Ben Grim's car had been pushed outdoors and William Emerson's was on its way when the walls crashed in. Other cars in the basement were owned by E. M. Tredway, Eby Gridley, L. C. Harris, Fred Wilson and a Cadillac owned by the company. The insurance on Emerson's car expired about a month ago.

Manager Leonard McNamara of the E. M. F. company and Manager George Maxon of the Cadillac concern got out all the cars on the upper floor. They worked with quickness and precision an dtook long chances in the burning building. Among those who owned these cars were F. E. House, Ray J. Wirtz, C. W. Anderson, Dr. J. D. Park, Dr. Graham, William Getty, E. L. Vivian, E. R. Wilson, James Ganon and the Cadillac and E. M. F. companies.

There were only three roomers in the hotel at the time the fire broke out and they succeeded in getting to the street without injury. Among those who lost their belongings were Richard Knutson, T. G. Washburn, John Trepann, Fred Adams, G. Johnson, Mrs. P. Moore, Andrew Johnson, Charles Williamson, Herbert Burt, S. L. Nelson, John Zitonki, Miss Ida Matthews and her roommate, Miss Rose Guitard, W. L. Krupp, Miss Ida Peterson, Miss Saxon and her roommate, Miss Weller, Miss Tiena Watson, John Peterson and F. S. Carlson, Thomas Evans, L. L. Shreaf, Mr. and Mrs. Turner, L. Epstein and Matt Brown.

The burned building is owned by G. G. Hartley.

NATIONS MUST ACT TOGETHER

Secretary Nagel Expresses Position as to Safety at Sea.

Washington, April 20. — Secretary Nagel has returned from New York determined to recommend strongly to President Taft the calling of an international congress to impose stringent regulations for protection of life on the ocean.

Secretary Nagel met the Carpathia at her dock and authorized the admission to the United States of every alien rescued. All who desire may remain, although the secretary believes many will return to their native lands.

The secretary said he was surprised by an almost complete absence of hysteria among the aliens.

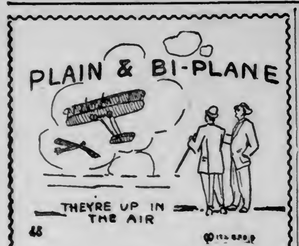
Impressive Calmness.

"Their calm and quiet attitude," he declared, "made the event of their landing all the more impressive in the light of the terrible calamity. I left the ship with unspeakable, undescribable respect for every man and woman among them. I must rate the bravery with which the immigrants faced the situation."

The secretary recited the case of one woman who, without display of emotion or appeal for sympathy, approached him thus:

"May I stay on board the ship tonight? I have lost my husband and my two children have not been well today."

Secretary Nagel observed that apparently all who might have been rescued from the Titanic were not saved. He called attention to reports that some of the lifeboats were not filled, and returned again and again to rescue men who had dived into the sea.



International Move Needed.

In support of an international congress to study ocean transportation, the secretary said this seemed the proper way to deal with the question, as the United States could not undertake to impose its views or laws on the rest of the world, which likewise is endeavoring to solve the matter.

"We have the laws without the merchant marine, while other nations have the merchant marine without the adequate laws," was the secretary's remark.

500 COLLEGE ATHLETES MEET AT DES MOINES.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 20.—More than 500 athletes representing several universities and colleges in the Middle West are here today to participate in the Drake university relay meet this afternoon. The team from the University of Chicago was among the late arrivals.

FIRM FOUNDATION

Nothing Can Undermine It in Duluth.

People are sometimes slow to recognize true merit, and they cannot be blamed, for so many have been humbugged in the past. The experience of hundreds of Duluth residents, expressed publicly through newspapers and other sources, places Doan's Kidney Pills on a firm foundation here.

L. P. Schneider, 210 W. Fourteenth St., Duluth, Minn., says: "The public statements I have given in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills still holds good. In 1898 I said that for a considerable length of time, I had suffered from pains in my back. My condition finally grew so bad that I could not stoop or lift without being tortured. It seemed as if a sharp knife were piercing me. I could not lie in one position long without becoming stiff and sore. The kidney secretions passed irregularly and contained sediment. I found no relief until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They drove away my trouble and during the twelve years that have since passed, I have never had any serious recurrence."

ONE OF THE WOMEN SAVED FROM THE SEA

MISS DOROTHY GIBSON.

Among the women saved from the Titanic is Miss Dorothy Gibson, who is the original "Harrison Fisher girl." Miss Gibson went abroad March 17 last, intending to stay three months, accompanied by her mother, who also was saved. When in Genoa last week she received a cable to return and just reached Cherbourg in time to sail on the Titanic.

KNOWN DEAD OF TITANIC NUMBER 1,635

of the steerage passengers who reached New York distraught and penniless have already come to realize the generosity and hospitality of America. Clad, fed and housed, they will be given ample time to recover from the shock of their experience and will start their life in the new world with ample funds and kindly advice of excellent counsellors.

The most complete story of the Titanic's fate yet obtained is being rapidly gathered in New York by the members of the senate investigating committee.

The committee at its first sessions listened to the testimony of J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the White Star line; Capt. Rostron of the Carpathia; Charles W. Lightholder, second officer of the Titanic, and others.

The committee in its work has the assistance of George Uhler, chief of the United States steamboat inspection service, and Truman H. Newberry, who was secretary of the navy under Theodore Roosevelt.

Reckless Speed Maintained.

The burden of the testimony thus far presented emphasizes the miquestioning faith of the Titanic's officers in her unsinkable character, the recklessness of steaming full speed through a sea where dangerous icebergs were known to threaten, and the remarkable calmness with which passengers and crew faced the last moments of the sinking ship.

The Titanic's fate has already resulted in prompt action by the trans-Atlantic lines to insure liners hereafter taking a course far to the south, where the iceberg danger will no longer be present. The various lines, it is announced, have agreed on a new "long" course, which dips far to the south of the course upon which the Titanic met disaster.

There is little disposition to criticize Capt. Smith for following the ocean lane in which he met disaster. He showed unusual caution, according to the naval hydrographers, by steering a course well to the south of the regular southern lane. The northern course, used by vessels from July to January, crosses the grand banks in latitude 45 north, 4 degs. further up the map than the southern or "long course" in which the Titanic met its fate.

Sixty Miles Out Course.

As a matter of fact, the Titanic was sixty miles south of the regular southern course and was even in danger of collision with eastbound steamers, which are entitled to right-of-way there by the rules of the sea.

The new route eastbound provides that steamships shall dip to latitude 382.0 on the first third of their course, making a total distance from New York to Fastnet of 3,000 miles, where the distance is now reckoned as 2,858 miles. Liners will thus be carried 270 miles below the route heretofore followed. The loss of time on the new course will be about nine hours for a 24-knot boat. Boats of the Olympic class may be eleven or fourteen hours longer in crossing. They will gain, however, in having clear weather most of the time, avoiding delays from fog.

Crews Couldn't Handle Boats.

There was some criticism among the survivors here today of the Titanic's crews inability to handle the lifeboats.

"The crew of the Titanic was a new one, of course," declared Mrs. George N. Stone of Cincinnati, "and had never been through a lifeboat drill, or any training in the rudiments of launching, manning and equipping the boats. Scores of lives were thus ruthlessly wasted, a sacrifice to inefficiency. Had there been any sea running instead of the glassy calm that prevailed, not a single passenger would have safely reached the surface of the water. The men did not know how to lower the boats; the boats were not provisioned; many of the sailors could not handle an oar with reasonable success."

No Boat Drills.

Albert Major, steward on the Titanic, admitted that there had been no boat drills and that the lifeboats were poorly handled.

"One thing comes to my mind above all else as I live over again the sinking of the Titanic," he said. "We of the crew realized at the start of the trouble that we were unorganized, and although every man did his best, we were hindered in getting the best results because we could not pull together.

"There had not been a single boat drill on the Titanic. The only time we were brought together was when we were mustered for roll call about 9 o'clock on the morning we sailed. From Wednesday noon until Sunday nearly five days passed, but there was no boat drill."

Fire in Coal Bunker.

Another story by members of the Titanic's crew which may have a bearing in the investigation of the rapid sinking of the ship is of a fire which is said to have started in one of the coal bunkers of the vessel shortly after she left her dock at Southampton and which was not extinguished until Saturday afternoon. The story, as told by a fireman, is as follows:

"It had been necessary to take the coal out of sections 2 and 3 on the starboard side, forward, and when the water came rushing in after the collision with the ice, the bulkheads would not hold because they did not have the supporting weight of the coal. Somebody reported to Chief Engineer Bell that the forward bulkhead had given way, and the engineer replied: 'My God, we are lost!'

Engineers Went Down.

"The engineers stayed by the pumps and went down with the ship. The firemen and stokers were sent on deck five minutes before the Titanic sank, when it was seen that they would inevitably be lost if they stayed longer at work trying to keep the fires in the boilers and the pumps at work. The lights burned to the last because the dynamos were run by oil engines."

With the sailing of a majority of the Titanic's crew this morning on the Lapland, some sources of interesting information have closed until the Red Star liner reaches the other side. United States Senator Smith believes certain members of the crew that he has held here for examination may reveal just what happened to the Titanic below decks when she struck the berg.

Did Not Break in Two.

Second Officer Lightholder says that the Titanic did not break in two, but made her dive diagonally into the sea and that when half way under the waves there were two explosions which he believed to be the boilers.

The survivors in the hospitals are reported to be doing nicely this morning. Contributions to the Titanic survivors relief fund continue to pour in and more than $50,000 has been raised so far. No more clothing is needed.

Happy were the members of the Titanic's surviving crew as they prepared to depart this morning on the Lapland. Generous merchants and others had fitted them out with clothes, hats, brushes, razors and numerous other things for their use, together with sums of money for their immediate needs. Other sums of money will be sent later by the relief committees.

PRAISES ACT OF RICH MAN

24 years old. Both died like soldiers.

"When the crash came I awakened them and told them to get dressed, a few minutes later I went into their rooms and helped them to get ready. I put a life preserver on Mr. Guggenheim.

"I pulled a heavy sweater over Mr. Guggenheim's life belt, and then they both went out. They stayed out and I could see what they were doing. They were going from one lifeboat to another. Mr. Guggenheim would shout out 'women first,' and he was of great assistance to the officers.

Put on Evening Clothes.

"When I saw Mr. Guggenheim about three-quarters of an hour after the crash, the thing which surprised me was that Mr. Guggenheim and his secretary were dressed in their evening clothes. They had deliberately taken off their sweaters, and as nearly as I can remember they wore no life belts at all.

"'What's that for?' I asked.

"'We've dressed up in our best,' replied Mr. Guggenheim, 'and are prepared to go down like gentlemen.' He was then he told me about the message to his wife, and that is what I have come here for.

"Well, shortly after the last few boats were lowered and I was ordered by the deck officer to man an oar, I waved goodbye to Mr. Guggenheim, and that was the last I saw of him and his secretary."

Efforts to find the body of Mr. Guggenheim, who was the fifth of the seven Guggenheim brothers, as well as the bodies of other victims, will be made by the six surviving brothers.

ROOSEVELT LEADS IN OREGON—LANDSLIDE AT NEBRASKA POLLS

abandoned hope at daybreak today when returns from Douglas county of the Second district, in which Omaha is located, showed that the Ohio governor's strength here had been greatly over-estimated by them. It had been predicted by many of those connected with his state campaign that his majority in Douglas county would run as high as 5,000. The returns received thus far prove it will be much less than that.

Clark supporters were surprised greatly by his showing in the First district, in which Mr. Bryan resides. That was thought to be a Wilson stronghold.

There seems little doubt that Clark has carried the First, Fourth, Fifth and probably the Sixth districts and the state at large.

In most precincts the heads of the tickets were counted first, and there still was doubt as to the winners in the race for nominations to the other offices.

Bryan for Delegate.

Indications are that William Jennings Bryan and Senator Hitchcock have been named as two of the four delegates at large to the national Democratic convention.

It is estimated that only about one-half the registered vote was polled.

Early reports gave Former Governor Ashton C. Shallenberger a lead over his three opponents for the Democratic nomination for United States senator. The two Republican aspirants for the senatorial nomination, Norris Brown and George W. Norris, insurgent leader of the last house, seemed to be running neck and neck.

Aldrich Ahead.

Meager returns received on the gubernatorial nominations indicate that Chester H. Aldrich, the incumbent, is leading Jesse S. Newton for the Republican nomination. Richard L. Metcalfe and John H. Morehead, rival Democratic candidates, showed about equal strength.

Approximately one-seventh of the vote outside of Douglas county, thirty-two of the sixty-one precincts in Omaha and six of the remaining thirty-three precincts in Douglas county show the following vote on the presidential choice by congressional districts:

First—Clark, 852; Roosevelt, 2,412; La Follette, 1,394; Harmon, 281; Wilson, 624; Taft, 1,069.

Second—Clark, 902; Harmon, 902; Wilson, 469; La Follette, 490; Roosevelt, 1,822; Taft, 1,054.

Third—Clark, 801; Harmon, 925; Wilson, 720; La Follette, 368; Roosevelt, 1,897; Taft, 941.

Fourth—Clark, 595; Harmon, 329; Wilson, 289; La Follette, 410; Roosevelt, 1,030; Taft, 213.

Fifth—Clark, 563; Harmon, 426; Wilson, 322; La Follette, 503; Roosevelt, 1,103; Taft, 278.

Sixth—Clark, 252; Harmon, 107; Wilson, 207; La Follette, 283; Roosevelt, 516; Taft, 198.

Totals—Clark, 3,555; Harmon, 2,970; Wilson, 2,631; La Follette, 3,439; Roosevelt, 8,785; Taft, 3,553.

White Star, the American, the Red Star, Leyland, the Atlantic Transport and the Dominion lines, to equip all steamers with sufficient lifeboats and raft boats for every passenger and every member of the crew, without regard to regulations prescribed by the governments of the United States, Great Britain, Germany, France, Belgium or any of the countries to which the steamer belonged.

Although Mr. Ismay urged the committee to permit him to go for the present, pleading that he was on the verge of a nervous collapse by reason of his experiences, his request was not granted.

There remain as witnesses four officers and twelve members of the crew, and they will be heard as quickly as possible. The indications are that the inquiry will not be completed before the middle of next week.

The first witness today was Alfred Crawford, the bedroom steward of the Titanic, who resumed his testimony as to the conditions at the time of the collision, at the point where he left off yesterday.

ATTORNEY IS REMOVED

J. De La Motte has been removed in seven of the White Iron Lake fire cases by Judge W. A. Cant of the district court.

The court today made an order substituting Mrs. I. C. Buell, a local woman attorney, in place of Mr. De La Motte.

Judge Cant has had the matter under advisement for several weeks.

The cases came before the court upon the motion of Mrs. Buell made on behalf of the following so-called White Iron Lake fire victims: Erick Nelson, Andrew Koski, Axel Norby, Matt Niemi, Andrew Mattson, Gust Henrickson and Anton Salo.

Mrs. Buell argued to the court that Mr. De La Motte had neglected the cases and that he had settled behind his clients' backs. She asked the court to remove him.

What stand the court took in the matter goes unexplained as far as the papers that were filed with the clerk today indicate. The court orders, however, that each of the seven pay Mr. De La Motte $20 for services to date.

All of the cases are pending against the Duluth & Iron Range railroad.

Skin Peeling Nature's Aid to New Complexion

(From Woman's Tribune)

Mercolized wax is a natural beautifier. By flaking off the devitalized surface skin, it merely hastens Nature's work. The second skin layer, brought gradually to view, exhibits the healthy youthful color produced by capillary circulation. This because the capillaries are thus brought nearer the surface; also because the new skin is unsoiled by dust and dirt. This wax, to be had at any drug store (an ounce will do) is put on nightly like cold cream, washed off mornings with warm water. Its work usually is completed in from seven to ten days, long enough not to show too marked results from day to day, or cause pain or detention indoors.

A face bath to remove wrinkles, made by dissolving an ounce of saxolite in a half pint witch hazel, is another natural beautifier, since its astringent and tonic effects smooth out the wrinkles in accordance with Nature's own process.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE is for Men and Women

Self respecting men and women always include a sanitary hair-dressing in their system of personal cleanliness. Good hair, properly dressed, adds to your appearance and helps retain your youth. Then, why grow old? Nice, luxuriant hair is merely a matter of care and cultivation.

After a thorough shampoo NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE should be applied daily for about a week or ten days after which two or three applications per week will be sufficient to keep the hair and scalp in prime condition. WANT LOT TO THEMSELVES

Fire Commissioners Want Police to Get Separate Site at New Duluth.

Abolishment of Private Employment Offices Not Recommended By Committee.

The board of fire commissioners does not take favorably to the idea of the city building its lock-up at New Duluth on the same lot as the fire hall.

At a meeting held yesterday afternoon the matter was discussed and the commissioners did not think that it would be advisable to put both structures on the same lot. The board is of the opinion that it would be better for the city to get another site. The reason gizen is that if New Duluth grows, as there is reason to expect, a new hall will be necessary and when the time comes to build it the entire lot should be available.

The council committee on fire department and the board will visit New Duluth this afternoon or Monday to look over the situation. The members of the committee believe that the lot will accommodate both. They point out that modern fire halls are not as large as those which have been used in the past, due to the introduction of motor apparatus. A report will probably be made to the council Monday night.

It is believed that the committee on ordinances and resolutions, which has charge of the resolution calling for the elimination of private employment offices and the establishment of a municipal bureau under the direction of the police, will not make any recommendations one way or the other. It is thought that the committee will point out that the charter makes provision for amendment of the charter upon a petition of 5 per cent of the voters of the last city election and that if the charter is to be amended this procedure should be followed. The state law also makes provision for employment offices and action would have to be taken by the legislature before they could be eliminated or a municipal bureau established, it is asserted.

Contracts which will be awarded by the board of public works will also come up for approval, along with other routine business.

PROFIT IN POTATOES

Farmers Near Embarrass Receive $5,000 From One Shipment.

St. Louis County Settlers Making Preparations for Bigger Crops.

As evidence of the fact that Northern Minnesota and particularly St. Louis county is just coming into its own as a potato-raising country, a number of encouraging reports have been received from several of the small communities tributary to the railroad lines between Duluth and the iron ranges.

During the past two weeks eight car loads of potatoes were shipped by farmers from the little station of Embarrass on the Duluth & Iron Range railroad. The potatoes were sold loaded for $1.05 a bushel, which is considered a topnotch price for last season's crop.

E. K. Coe, county road engineer, who had occasion to visit Embarras last week, today said that the farmers in and around Embarrass had previously shipped seven car loads or in-all fifteen and that the sellers got good prices for the entire lot. Embarrass probably has fifty farmers who were interested in these shipments. They will realize about $5,000 from the last sale, which is considered excellent in view of the fact that it was generally supposed that most of last season's output had been disposed of.

What is true of Embarrass is also true of a number of the small farming communities on the range, it is said. From the most authentic crop reports that can be learned, it is understood that the farmers in this portion of the county produced a potato crop twice as large in 1911 as in any previous year.

Mr. Coe also observed that in a number of the settlements where farmers had cleared only a small portion of their holdings up to this time, they were now getting busy in getting old stumps out and making preparations for big crops this year. It is understood that many of the farmers will put in most of their lands to potatoes.

In a number of the older communities, warehouses are now being built through co-operative associations of the farmers. A new association has just been incorporated at Proctor, known as the Proctor Potato company. This concern will take steps at once towards the erection of a warehouse.

The object of the organization is to further the interests of the Greater Duluth in all ways possible. The meeting Wednesday will be one of the regular monthly gatherings and the local situation will be thoroughly diagnosed. The luncheon will be served at 6 o'clock. Plates will be 60 cents each.

The Best Proof That Coffee Hurts

Often comes from those who formerly said, "Coffee doesn't hurt me," but who finally changed to

POSTUM

When such persons find relief from coffee troubles, and the way back to old-time health and comfort, they have something to say worth while—

Read letter to the right.

"There's a Reason" for POSTUM

Made by Postum Cereal Company, Limited, Battle Creek, Michigan.

TALES THAT ARE TOLD

"I was one of the kind who wouldn't believe that coffee was hurting me," says a N. Y. woman. "You just couldn't convince me its use was connected with the heart and stomach trouble I suffered from most all of the time." (Tea contains caffeine—the same drug found in coffee, and is just as harmful). "My trouble finally got so bad I had to live on milk and toast almost entirely for three or four years. Still I loved the coffee and wouldn't believe it could do such damage.

"What I needed was to quit coffee and take nourishment in such form my stomach could digest. I had read much about Postum, but never thought it would fit my case until one day I decided to quit coffee and give it a trial and make sure about it. So I got a package and carefully followed the directions.

"Soon I began to get better and was able to eat carefully selected foods without the aid of pepsin or other digests and it was not long before I was really a new woman physically.

"Now I am healthy, hearty and sound, can eat anything and everything that comes along, and I know this wonderful change is all due to my having quit coffee and got the nourishment I needed through this delicious Postum in place of the dangerous coffee and tea.

"My wonder is why everyone don't give up coffee and the troubles that go with it and build themselves up as I have done, with Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Easy to prove by 10 days trial of Postum in place of coffee. The reward is big and worth the test.

ON THE IRON RANGES

FAMILY NOT ON TITANIC

Chisholm Mining Man Advised That Wife and Children Did Not Sail.

Mining Boss Runquist First Feared Great Disaster Had Bereaved Him.

Chisholm, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—Otto Runquist has received a mesage from the White Star line office at New York stating that Mrs. Runquist and children did not book passage on the Titanic. Mr. Runquist feels greatly relieved as he feared that his family, who have spent the winter in the northern part of Scandinavia, had taken passage on the Titanic.

No definite word has been received from them, but he feels assured that they are booked on one of the other company boats for a later passage.

First Fears Groundless.

Mr. Runquist is shift boss at the Sheuango mine and yesterday he was of the opinion his wife and two children had sailed upon the Titanic and as their names did not appear among those on the Carpathia, he was naturally alarmed.

Aged Mother Is Saved.

Hibbing, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—Felix Turkala, a Finnish homesteader, living in the country south of Hibbing, anxiously waited for news yesterday of the safety of his aged mother, who was a passenger on the steamship Titanic. The list of survivors published yesterday gave the name of Mrs. Turkala among the survivors. The White Star line officials were silent as to confirmation when the newspapers announced that six of the Titanic's passengers had died after reaching the decks of the Carpathia. The anxiety of Turkala and his brother knew no bounds. The brothers had forwarded their mother a ticket to their old home in Helsingfors, Finland. She had gone to Liverpool on the Cunard line and there taken the Titanic. Late last night the news that she was among those saved was confirmed from New York.

Mrs. Kelly was horrified when she looked out of the window and saw the bear chasing the children about the brush pile. She grabbed her husband's rifle and running to the door opened fire upon bruin, two well dispatched shots finishing the beast.

When Mr. Kelly returned he did not express surprise as he said he always knew his wife would be equal to the occasion whenever danger arose.

Biwabik, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—Judge Salmon did a rushing business yesterday passing on the cases of men arrested charged with breaking the fishing laws. Mining Capt. August Isaacson of Tower was fined $10 and costs for catching game fish in Quagema lake and Embarrass river out of season. Isaacson was arrested with several others by Game Wardens Wood and James. Some of the others arrested were charged with using nets. The officials seized and confiscated for the state over 100 feet of nets, two boats, a large amount of fish, three guns and a lot of fishing and hunting paraphernalia.

EVELETH CANDY DEALER IS FINED

Pays $22.50 for Selling Almonds Colored With Coal Dye.

Eveleth, Minn., April 20. — (Special to The Herald.) — B. Brida, a local confectioner, paid a fine and costs amounting to $22.50 in municipal court Friday for selling almonds colored with coal tar dye. The complaint was made by A. D. Sibball, state food inspector, who just now is paying a visit to the Eveleth stores. Mr. Brida was wholly ignorant of the im-rity of the candy until confronted with the analysis made by the inspector. The wholesaler who sold the goods is the party really responsible, but since he does business in another state he cannot be reached by the Minnesota law.

Looking for More Lawbreakers.

Mr. Sibball also visited a number of other places in Eveleth, including practically all the soda fountains and the candy kitchens.

"On the whole," said he, "conditions are as good here as elsewhere, but they might be better. We have not been able to give this section of the state the attention we would like to before, but this year we shall make several careful inspections of the food supplies in the range towns and wherever adulterated foods, including liquors, are offered for sale, arrests will be made."

1711 W. 20th St., Chicago, Ill. — "My child suffered greatly with eczema. First small sores began in a few places on her face and then all over her face, becoming larger. The child scratched them, which made them worse. They itched terribly and she could not sleep. The itching made her cry often, but medicine did not seem to help any. This had lasted three weeks when I sent for Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The result was great. Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured her and we highly recommend them." (Signed) Mrs. Kral, November, 1911.

FACE FREED FROM PIMPLES

Through Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

417 Cherry St., New York, N. Y. — "About two years ago there suddenly appeared on my face and forehead pimples and blackheads. The pimples were scattered over my face. They were sore and caused plenty of pain. I suffered much from them. I tried several different remedies. I declared it was hopeless to remove those pimples from my face.

"About four months ago a friend recommended to me the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used them nightly and almost immediately I found the desired results. First I would smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment and leave same on my face for five minutes. Then I would wash my face thoroughly with Cuticura Soap and warm water. After doing this for three weeks I found my face free from pimples and my sufferings at an end. I always use the Cuticura Soap now." (Signed) Sydney Unger, Nov. 22, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. book. Address, "Cuticura," Dept. T, Boston. Tender-faced men should shave with Cuticura Soap Shaving Stick.

Children Should Develop Naturally

if their food is right.

When a child is pale and delicate, or is backward in his studies, the reason is often found to be that his food does not contain the elements required to properly nourish the fast growing body and rapidly developing brain.

NEEDLESS PERILS OF THE DEEP.

A table showing statistics of forty-nine ocean liners making the port of New York discloses the following facts:

First, that the combined passenger and crew capacity of these vessels is 112,261 souls.

Second, that the capacity of their lifeboats and liferafts is only 52,681.

This means that on the average, the small boat capacity of the vessels to which human beings are asked to trust their lives is less than half the average passenger and crew capacity.

In other words, the Titanic is not an exception, as many hoped, but merely the rule.

Only one of these forty-nine vessels has lifeboat capacity enough to care for passengers and crew, and that is a small vessel, the combined passenger and crew capacity of which is but 412.

Only five of these vessels have lifeboats enough to carry passengers alone, and in no case would there be enough when sailors enough to man the lifeboats were put aboard.

Lewis Nixon, the great shipbuilding expert whose interview was published in The Herald the other evening, said that the presence of lifeboats on these great passenger vessels was chiefly for sentimental effect anyway.

The sentimental effect is very great, indeed, when as in the case of the Titanic fifteen hundred people are doomed to death because there were not enough boats to carry them even to temporary safety.

The fact is, of course, that to carry boats enough to insure the safety of every human soul on board is expensive, that it would reduce the carrying capacity of the vessel, that it would in some measure affect its sightliness, and that, therefore, the passenger vessels carry enough to make it look safe to those who don't analyze a situation, and that is all.

And the same thing is true of the Great Lakes passenger service, according to all reports.

There is law enough on the subject. What is needed is enforcement of the law. Section 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States covers the ground fully:

> Every steamer navigating the ocean, or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States, shall be provided with such numbers of lifeboats, floats, rafts, life-preservers, life-carrying projectiles and the means of propelling them, AS WILL BEST SECURE THE SAFETY OF ALL PERSONS on board such vessel in case of disaster.

That is plain enough. It may be too lose. It may be subject to the construction that if there are life-preservers enough for all on board the law is complied with. But it is also subject to the construction that no passenger-carrying vessel shall be permitted to take passengers from any American port unless it has satisfied the inspectors that it is amply able to care for every human being aboard in such a fate as that which befell the Titanic, for instance.

In the interpretation of such a statute the safety of the public should be the first if not the only guide. Considerations of economy or appearance should be at the tail of the list, if they are permitted to enter into consideration at all.

In view of Oregon's principal fruit, the Taft supporters will be more than ever convinced that it was an apple that Eve ate.

WORLDWIDE FREE TRADE.

Some day worldwide peace will smile over the globe, and when swords are beaten into pruning hooks the soldier will become a producer and the sailor a merchant mariner.

And some day, about the same time, the last protective tariff barrier between the nations will be levelled, and the world will unite in the common duty of promoting the wellbeing of humanity.

There can be no question about either of these things. They will happen, or else there is no truth in logic, and no logic in the law of evolution.

Mr. MacVeagh, President Taft's secretary of the treasury, in a recent speech pointed out the certainty of worldwide free trade.

"It is simply impossible," he said, "to conceive a free road to civilization and human progress unless the tariff walls are eventually and in the long run broken down. The protective system may do well enough for the present stage of the world's civilization, but it won't do for a civilization that is much more advanced, nor for a human progress and a human brotherhood that is better conceived.

"The enlargement of national boundaries and the adoption of freedom of trade within these boundaries has made the area of free trade in the world much greater than the area of protectionist trade, because the internal trade is very much larger than the external trade. And the same sort of progress which now dominates within the nations will carry itself beyond the nations and over the world."

Wise words, and true ones.

Suppose the builders of this nation had not been wise enough to prohibit the states from levying tariff duties on interstate commerce.

Don't you suppose that the states which in the process of time have been merged into a great and harmonious nation would have reared tariff walls against each other? Don't you suppose, therefore, that the separation between them would have been nearly as sharp as that between neighboring nations in Europe? And don't you suppose that it would have taken the hardest kind of work, and a long time, to tear down those tariff walls and make the nation one?

Tariffs form a restriction of trade. In so far as they are effective at all they hamper and reduce the volume of trade. Yet in the exchange of commodities between nations there must be profit on both sides or there would be no exchange. Tariff duties, therefore, are restrictions upon profitable trading, and the world over they rest most heavily upon the producing many and benefit chiefly the few who spend what others earn.

The time will come when there will be a world patriotism instead of a national patriotism, for national patriotism, fine and beautiful though it is, has its roots in a rivalry between nations which is always at the cost of that brotherhood of man which is the ideal both of Christianity and civilization.

Now it appears that Oregon and Nebraska also belong in the soapbox class.

TAFT'S POLITICAL PROGRESS.

Three legal presidential preference primaries have been held in which the people have had a chance to express their opinion of the administration. Official reports of the vote at each of these primary elections are now available. Here is the showing they make:

	Taft.	Roosevelt.	La Follette.
North Dakota	1,653	24,046	33,767
Wisconsin	47,629	.....	131,920
Illinois	128,501	266,911	43,317
Totals	177,783	290,957	209,004

The total Taft vote in the three states is 177,783; the total anti-Taft vote is 499,961.

The total Republican vote cast was 677,744; and of these the president of the United States, a candidate for renomination, received but twenty-six per cent. In these three primaries he has been beaten nearly three to one.

In North Dakota the president got less than three per cent of the total Republican vote.

In Illinois the president carried but one congressional district out of twenty-five, and only eight out of 102 counties.

The president got but a handful of delegates in Pennsylvania, where a kind of a primary was held.

President Taft may yet be nominated, but these figures show what the people will do with the party that nominates him for another term.

A German aeronaut believes a trans-Atlantic flight possible. At least, he can dodge the icebergs.

THE COURTS AND THE PEOPLE.

The statute law lags far behind public opinion. Laws are needed for years before they are enacted, and then their troubles are just begun because they have to run the gauntlet of courts often chained by precedents and blinded to human rights by idolatrous worship of property rights.

Constitutional law is still farther behind public opinion.

And farther back still, their feet tangled in mossgrown precedents and their heads fogged in a maze of infinitesimalities, plod bench and bar.

It is because of these facts, and because to bench and bar the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" is so often of mightier importance than the suffering of child laborers, the oppression of working mothers, and the degradation of labor, that Roosevelt, Gaynor and others are applauded, not mobbed, when they assail the courts.

Less irritable resentment of criticism and more constructive effort to deserve freedom from criticism would be becoming both in bar and bench.

"The Titanic couldn't sink," said the builders. Did you ever see a fireproof building after a fire?

WHO OWNS THE NEWSPAPERS?

Congressman Barnhart of Indiana has offered an amendment to the postal appropriation bill which requires that all newspapers "shall have plainly printed in a conspicuous place therein the name or names of the publisher or publishers, the name or names of the owner or owners, including all stockholders of such publications."

This is carrying out a plan which Mr. Bryan has advocated.

There is nothing wrong in it. The people are compelled, willy or nilly, to depend to a very great degree upon their newspapers for the facts on which political judgments are based. They have a right, therefore, to know who owns each newspaper, in order that they may take into consideration the affiliations or bias of the newspaper owners.

The provision hardly goes far enough, however. There have been many cases where the real rulers of newspapers were the holders of newspaper bonds or mortgages. The stockholders and publishers were figureheads for those in whose debt the newspaper stood. And sometimes these wielders of newspaper mortgages, unsuspected by the public, have been public utility or special privilege corporations.

Publicity—full publicity—of the controlling influences behind all newspapers is fairly a public right.

An eastern professor believes that chickens may be taught how to talk. Then we can get some inside information on the price of eggs.

THE BUSY BEE.

The bee, as well as the ant, has been held up by moralists for human emulation. Both are very busy bugs, and aspiring youth has been told that if he would do as they do he would wear diamonds.

What good it would do to have the youth of the land emulate the misdirected energy of the ant passes understanding. The ant destroys lawns, butts into strawberry beds, and makes itself generally a nuisance with its infernal busyness. It stores up no honey, and even if it works up the soil the product of its energies is unavailable unless you first go to a lot of trouble and expense killing off the ants in it.

But the bee—the bee is busy, too, busier than the ant, and the bee really accomplishes something. Most of the ant's activity is pure bluff. While the ant is scurrying excitedly about, darting here and there and traveling a mile to go a foot, pretending a ferocious industry which deceives only the moralists, the bee does things. The "bee line" is a real thing, and with a ruler you can't draw a straighter.

The bee industriously works among the blossoms, sipping their sweets and storing them up, and when it has a load takes a bee line to its hive, where presently a vast store of honey may be discovered. That isn't the end of the bee's usefulness; it isn't even the beginning. For the bee works faithfully and without ceasing for humanity.

When it drinks the sweets from the heart of the flower it gathers on its wings the fertilizing pollen which coats the anther at the top of the stamen, and carries it to the waiting stigma at the summit of the pistil of another blossom. Deposited by the bee, the pollen adheres to the sticky surface of the stigma, and sends down a tiny hollow root through which the fertilizing fluid brings the impulse of life to the embryo seeds. Thus the bee, besides collecting honey, has an important part in carrying on nature's affairs. Where the flowers carrying pollen only are on the lower branches, of the plant, and the flowers carrying ovules only are on the upper branches, the bee kindly begins its work at the bottom and works upward, so that fertilization may be properly carried on.

And how busy the bee is! A farmer who has made a study of bees estimates that each bee sips more than six hundred flowers to get one load of sweets, that it makes twenty trips daily to the hive, and therefore that it visits every pleasant summer's day twelve thousand blossoms.

The Titanic's call for help was heard by the Carpathia only because the wireless operator happened to stay ten minutes overtime on his job. It would be interesting to know just what he gets for that bit of overtime.

THE ARTS AND THE MULTITUDE.

A rich American recently paid a million dollars for two paintings by Velasquez, and prices ranging from a hundred thousand to half a million are no longer uncommon.

No complaint can be made about the cost of these paintings so long as the buyers can afford it, though there may be regrets that the painters participated so little in the financial results of their work, and regrets greater still that society is so busy providing individuals with such fortunes as those which make this picture-buying possible that it cannot afford to buy pictures for the public benefit.

But these high prices show that until society gets around to keeping some of its surplus for public galleries, instead of letting all of it drift into the hands of the specially privileged, the art of painting and sculpture is above the reach of the masses, except as they have access to public galleries which benefit by the generosity of the rich. The governments, whether of nation, states or cities, have not yet begun to spend much money for the cultivation and satisfaction of the artistic instincts of the multitude.

The art of music is within the reach of a much larger number. Still, grand opera and concerts by the great artists who play or sing the world's great music are necessarily very expensive, and not even these are within the financial grasp of the multitude.

Paintings, sculptures and great musical productions are not only financially beyond the reach of the masses, but geographically as well. The great galleries are in the largest cities, and the great artists of music seldom reach the smaller communities and never the country districts. In the territory in which more than half the people live the only access to great sculptures and paintings is through photographs or prints, and the only access to great music is through the phonographs or the performances of more or less uninspired amateurs.

But there is an art, as great as any of them and far more permanent in its effects upon mind and character, that is within the reach of the humblest. That is the art of letters. The classic books of all ages are available to the poorest homes. For a dollar you can buy the complete works of William Shapespeare, a greater genius than any who ever worked in stone or paints or music. For the price of a meal at a cheap restaurant you can buy the masterpieces of the master minds of fiction, philosophy, history, science or poetry.

Until society establishes government, state or city art galleries, playhouses and opera or concert halls, the other arts are available to the multitude only at second hand.

But the art of letters is within the grasp of the poorest, and there is no excuse for the humblest home being without a few great books.

The question naturally arises, why wouldn't it be economical and effective, in case of war, to dispense with a few battleships and hire the services of a couple of dozen good, healthy icebergs?

SWAT THE FLIES.

With the coming of warm weather the flies begin their summer career; only a few now, millions and billions later; swarming in filth, carrying the germs of disease, bringing sickness and death into the homes.

A very good safeguard against unnecessary economic loss from illness and fatalities is described in the slogan "Swat the fly!"

The best way to swat the fly is to destroy its breeding places—which are noisome and a nuisance anyway.

Swatting done this way counts a million times more than that done with folded newspaper or other weapon of offense.

A fly wanders out of hibernation today. Two weeks hence it will have 120 adult descendants. By Sept. 10 these will have produced a fly population amounting to 5,000,000,000,000. That's just a single line of descent, too.

Anybody that wants the job of swatting these five trillion flies is welcome to it. The place to swat is their birthplace—which is, nine times out of ten, a place of filth that ought to be cleaned anyway.

"Potatoes are lower"—What? Getting away from the hills?

There is an apparent determination in several quarters to establish a close relationship between "J. Bruce Ismay" and just plain "Dismay."

One of the Titanic disaster victims was warned of the coming event by a fortune teller. The prophet's title is a misnomer. She was really a misfortune teller.

Archie Butt got into one of the lifeboats, to help one of the women in, and then smilingly lifted his hat and got out again. Pitchfork Ben Tillman wasn't so far off when he called the young officer "one of God Almighty's gentlemen."

THE OPEN COURT

(Readers of The Herald are invited to make free use of this column to express their ideas about the topics of general interest, but discussions of sectarian religious differences are barred. Letters should not exceed 300 words—the shorter the better. They must be written on one side of the paper only, and they must be accompanied in every case by the name and address of the writer, though these need not be published. A signed letter is always more effective, however.)

HE LIKED DULUTH AND THE HERALD.

To the Editor of The Herald:

I wish to express to you and to The Herald staff my very great appreciation of the prominence given my address in Duluth last week. The report that appeared in your paper was altogether the best digest of an address that I have ever had made and I expect to use it in giving advance information of such lectures in the future.

I also appreciated very much the cordial editorial. I came away from Duluth feeling that I had met the keenest and most progressive set of men with whom I had ever had the pleasure of becoming acquainted.

I shall watch your advances with interest and shall be glad if I can at any future time be of any practical assistance in the furthering of your plans and work. Sincerely yours,

B. M. RASTALL.

THE DANGERS OF PTOMAINE POISONING.

To the Editor of The Herald:

An article in your issue of March 26 gives an account of R. W. Pender being afflicted with ptomaine poisoning. I believe no better work can be done by the press than to warn the public of the danger existing from partaking of foods not properly preserved and the necessity of utilizing canned goods as soon as possible after opening the can. Scientific experiments have determined time and time again that numerous articles of food, when not kept in a hygienic condition, readily deteriorate so as to become poisonous substances.

The formation of ptomaine generally, although not always, accompanies putrefaction. Therefore, great care should be taken that meat, fish, fowl, oysters, canned goods, etc. are eaten only when they are in good condition. It is not economy to partake of food when putrefaction has commenced. Food can be kept in a hygienic condition either by heat or refrigeration by the exclusion of air or by the application of substances which, on account of their antiseptic properties, prevent the growth of poisonous germs.

Statistics show that since the enactment of the pure food law there have been 2,124 cases of ptomaine poisoning, 1,302 of which were fatal. It is certainly distressing to think of this vast number of persons becoming ill and of so many innocent lives lost merely because food products are not preserved so as to keep them in a hygienic condition until consumed. Such distressing conditions will continue to prevail as long as consumers do not heed the warning of the danger existing in consuming foods not kept in a hygienic condition. Yours very truly,

H. L. HARRIS.

THE TITANIC DISASTER.

To the Editor of The Herald:

While I am astounded by the sad catastrophe of the Titanic, I am not at all surprised. The world now knows that it was due to incompetency and what I would call proud independence. Warnings, timely enough, were despised. The public ought to kindly and profitably note the superior intelligence of the German, French and Italian lines in the recent and previous sea perils. When traveling to Europe lately I got, although not seeking it, a good deal of inside information about the safety and sanitation of these boats of both White Star and Cunard lines. I happened to be booked for the Olympic on her fated trip. On such occasions many things come out. When crossing on one of the record speed liners, an official of the New York health department did some inspecting. He certainly had a stormy time when he demanded inspection of the engines and stoker's quarters. Finally he had to produce his papers. The state of things on those boats should be made public. It is a crime to conceal them. I know it has been done. Any competent engineer will be convinced that these boats are far from safe. That man's explanation was as clear as a, b, c, showing the woeful risk caused by the machinery being too heavy and misplaced sill more dangerous. They did not construct the boats properly; and once a boat is built it has to make money safe or not. About courtesy there is none to Americans. I know that nothing can overcome the elements but the Almighty hand; but the boat could stand still or hover slowly as the other lines did until danger was past. Practically my opinion is that if an American wants to consult his regard for courtesy and the safety of his life let him take the boats of his own nation, or the Italian, French or German lines.

VERITAS.

International Falls, April 19.

THANK YOU.

To the Editor of The Herald:

I have just read where the News Tribune boasts of its prowess in purveying the news of the Titanic catastrophe. Recognizing that The Herald cannot afford to indulge in the wretchedly bad taste of a squabble with the News Tribune about which conducted itself the better in the handling of a terrible thing that has stirred men's souls to the very bottom, with your permission I wish to say that I got the first news of the disaster from a Herald extra, which I bought just as I was going home from the theater Tuesday night, and that I got the best and fullest and ablest reports of every stage of the developments from The Herald's many extras and regular editions.

Another thing: The News Tribune says the morning paper gets the news. The News Tribune carries a table showing the results of presidential conventions and primaries. For a week that table has stood without the addition of the votes Teddy got in Pennsylvania last Saturday, leaving Taft ahead when really he is behind. The morning paper gets the news; why doesn't it print it? Very truly,

FAIRPLAY.

Duluth, April 20.

HEAPING INSULT UPON INJURY.

To the Editor of The Herald:

In its summing up of the awful Titanic disaster, the Duluth News Tribune said editorially or reportorially, Wednesday:

"The picture that inevitably presents itself in view of what is known, is of men like John Jacob Astor, master of scores of millions; Benjamin Guggenheim of the famous family of bankers; Isidor Straus, a merchant prince; William T. Stead, veteran journalist; Maj. Archibald Butt, soldier; Washington Roebling, noted engineer—of any or all of these men stepping aside and bravely, gallantly remaining to die, that the place he otherwise might have filled could be taken by some sabot-shod, shawl-enshrouded, illiterate and penniless peasant woman of Europe."

The humanity, the brains and the heart of the fellow who could write that stuff will bring the blush of shame to honest manhood wherever it is read. In the hour of that terrible disaster no one will even think of detracting from the respect due the noble men who did their plain duty, whether Astors, Guggenheims, or any other name. When life and death are in the balance, any woman and child—no matter how lowly or from what part of God's earth—will always be helped first by any man who has a spark of real manhood in his makeup.

And he would be low indeed—far below the level of manhood—who could find it in his heart, publicly and brazenly, to speak of any woman he had helped to save as the Duluth News Tribune has spoken above. The man who had saved any woman—no matter how lowly—would never even think of such language as the Duluth News Tribune has given utterance to above.

"The sabot-shod, shawl-enshrouded, illiterate and penniless peasant woman of Europe" has done her part to build up the great American West; and she is prized by the Master of all men more highly than is he whose sense of honor could permit him to spew his gall and bitterness on the head of the terribly bereaved and now certainly destitute "peasant woman of Europe," after such an awful disaster.

Shame upon him who could disgrace the name of American manhood as the Duluth News Tribune writer has done in this case.

THE GOVERNORSHIP.

A Startling Statement.

Roseau Region: C. A. Congdon of Duluth proves conclusively that on the per capita basis the governmental expense for each inhabitant of Minnesota is greater than that of any other state. This is a startling statement and will cause every taxpayer to inquire into the cause for such gross extravagance in this state.

Sickening.

Northome Record: Sam Iverson for governor instead of Eberhart is the latest prediction of the jump to be made by the interests. Then Eberhart for United States senator. Wouldn't that choke an ox?

Especially the First.

Walker Pilot: The state at large continues to kick on Eberhart, and find fault with the other gubernatorial candidates.

Blew a Hole in Governor's Claims.

Fergus Falls Journal: When Hon. Chester A. Congdon of Duluth produced the figures to show that under Governor Eberhart's administration Minnesota spent more money per capita to run its state government than any other state government in the Union save Nevada, he blew a big hole in the governor's claim that his was a business administration.

The Dodgers.

Perham Enterprise: It's all very simple. Eberhart won't call a special session of the legislature because the people of the state do not want it and the Republican state central committee will not provide for a primary because there would be no legal safeguard for it. Hence no primary, and the machine rules. Long life to the dodgers—in private life.

And This 5 Cents More.

Long Prairie Leader: Governor Eberhart has an order with a press clipping bureau and charges the bill to the state, so that every time a newspaper refers to the governor, a tax is imposed on the people. This little paragraph will cost the people of Minnesota 5 cents.

Weak in Northern Minnesota.

Park Rapids Clipper: It is pretty generally conceded that Eberhart is out of it. The very face so many candidates are in the field is evidence that Eberhart is weak, and the nearer the convention the weaker he will become. He has reached the state of fright so much so that he is trying to carry water on both shoulders and it is beginning to spill. There is no denying the fact that Eberhart is weak in Northern Minnesota. He made himself weak by his declaration at Brainerd, an uncalled-for statement, but once made, he should have kept faith with the Northern people. The fact that he did not do so has shaken our faith in his promises, and no Northern Minnesota man is going to St. Paul to yell himself hoarse for the governor unless he wants an oil inspectorship or some other equally important office.

New York and Illinois.

New York World: In Illinois 230,000 Republicans at the primaries say that the state's delegates to the Republican national convention shall vote for the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for president.

In New York one William Barnes says that the state's delegates-at-large to the Republican national convention shall not be instructed to vote for William H. Taft for president.

In Illinois 220,000 Democrats at the primaries say that the state's delegates to the Democratic national convention shall vote for the nomination of Champ Clark for president.

In New York one Charles F. Murphy will say today that the state's delegates to the Democratic national convention are to go uninstructed and to vote as a unit.

Which system is better for American institutions? Which system is more nearly in harmony with all the theories and traditions of popular government? The questions answer themselves.

At the same time, the World does not regard the results of the Illinois primaries as especially flattering to the intelligence of either the Republican majority or the Democratic majority.

Mr. Roosevelt's nomination would be a political calamity, yet nearly 250,000 of Illinois Republicans expressed themselves in favor of it, just as an overwhelming majority of the Illinois Democrats in the 1896 primaries expressed themselves in favor of free silver.

Champ Clark is as weak and wabbly a candidate as the Democrats could nominate for president. Yet Mr. Clark's majority over Woodrow Wilson in the Illinois primaries is greater than Mr. Roosevelt's majority over Mr. Taft.

These were only "advisory" primaries, and we have no exalted opinion of the advice that the Illinois Republicans gave to their party or of the advice that the Illinois Democrats gave to their party. Nevertheless, we should rather trust the nomination of a president to the Illinois method than to the New York method. We should rather take our chances with 600,000 American citizens than with one William Barnes and one Charles F. Murphy.

Socialist Milwaukee.

Chicago P. O.: The Milwaukee correspondent of the Record-Herald sent some interesting figures yesterday which demonstrate how premature was the verdict of the country that Socialism had been "scotched" in the Wisconsin metropolis. These figures are worth a moment's study:

Year.	Socialist.	Non-Socialist.	Total
1898	2,444	44,221	46,665
1900	2,473	47,778	50,251
1902	8,373	49,887	58,260
1904	15,313	41,138	56,451
1906	16,784	44,118	60,902
1908	20,837	41,517	62,404
1910	27,608	31,876	59,484
1912	30,272	42,176	72,448

Two things are immediately apparent from the Record-Herald's figures. One is that the Socialist vote in Milwaukee has grown steadily and without a single setback from the beginning. The other is that, although the voting population in Milwaukee has steadily increased, with only two temporary setbacks, the number of non-Socialist votes has steadily decreased, not only relatively but absolutely. For some reason or other there are fewer non-Socialists in Milwaukee today than there were in 1898, when the Socialist were a mere handful of 2,000.

It is evident that the Milwaukee correspondent is well within the facts when he suggests that Milwaukee is more Socialist today than ever before.

SATURDAY NIGHT TALK

The High Cost of Right Living.

I shall not bring coals to Newcastle by telling you anything about the high cost merely of living. The butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker are giving you all needful instruction along that line. With almost every commodity on the jump, millions of American families are finding it a serious problem to keep ahead of the bill collector.

At this time we speak rather of the high cost of right living. Kindly note the qualifying adjective. I want to take the discussion for a moment or two into a higher realm, and make it a concern of moral life rather than of mere physical existence. Existence is not necessarily expensive. A crust or two and a few glasses of water a day will do the trick for any of us. Genuinely right living, on the other hand, whether one is accustomed to dine on terrapin or on black bread, is a very costly proposition. And it will be no cheaper whether the price of foodstuffs goes up or down.

It is not an easy matter in this world to stand up to one's ideals. Such loyalty, whatever the old school copybooks used to tell us, means struggle and sacrifice. He who hitches his wagon to a star is going to find rough traveling. The best and most genuine people in the community are not always the people receiving the largest degree of popular acclaim. The man who lives clean, tells the truth, works for the public good without any ulterior motives, is by no means sure of receiving all the bouquets. Instead, he is likely to get kicks and cuffs and sneers. The better man is, the more will all evil men hate him.

History proves the case up to the hilt. You have a reson why Dante, most luminous spirit of his age, one of the greatest poets of all time, must die a broken-hearted exile. You have a reason why noble-spirited Paul of Tarsus must lay his neck on the headsman's block. You have a reason why Jesus of Nazareth, great friend of humanity, must die at the hands of implacable enemies. The world has a way of stoning its prophets and setting at naught its moral leaders. Anyone who has lifted his head above the level of his times has had to face the opposing spirit of commercialism and utility. Our own age is nowise different in this regard from its predecessors.

His biographer tells how, during the last ten years of his short life, the composer Mozart lived in the great pleasure-loving city of Vienna. He was in extreme poverty, eking out a precarious support by giving concerts and piano lessons. Often he actually suffered from cold and hunger. His compositions brought him in little or nothing, the public preferring the "ragtime" of that day to the more serious works of the master. Then his publisher told him that he must write in an easy, popular style or not a note would be printed, nor a cent paid him. He replied, "Then, my good sir, I have only to resign myself and die of hunger."

It doesn't cost much merely to live, to exist, as the calm does in the harbor mud; but to live right—that is an expensive matter. The man who stands for a principle, suffers for the truth, and proves loyal to an ideal must frequently exercise a force of will and a patience in sacrifice that moral misers know nothing about.

The costliest product in creation is a righteous character; and it is worth all it costs. The best things in life come high. If you start out to buy a genuine Franz Hals Rambrandt you are likely to pay for it at about the rate of $1,000 per square inch. A sign painter will cover a whole board fence for you at a cheaper rate than that. If you get the masterpiece you are going to settle a big bill. And it is not otherwise with character.

When a man invests in a good life he invests in that which will oulast the stars. An approving conscience is the supremely earthly boon. Any material success is as dust and ashes beside that. When one comes to realize these things he is conscious of no sacrifice and no regret as he gladly pays the high cost of right living.

THE PARSON.

Within the Republican Party.

Chicago Evening Post: What is happening in the internal affair of the republican party?

Down in Missouri some six weeks ago a district convention for the choosing of presidential delegates started things by bolting the doors against the friends of one candidate and allowing only his opponents to vote.

In Mississippi a man with a revolver controlled the convention.

In Indiana the most unfair methods were used in choosing the delegates from Marion county and seating them in the convention.

In Kentucky there are charges of grave scandals.

The New York primaries in their crookedness out-Tammanyized Tammany.

Colorado's primary was as bad.

And in Michigan on Thursday Gov. Osborn had to call out the militia to prevent bloodshed at the republican state convention.

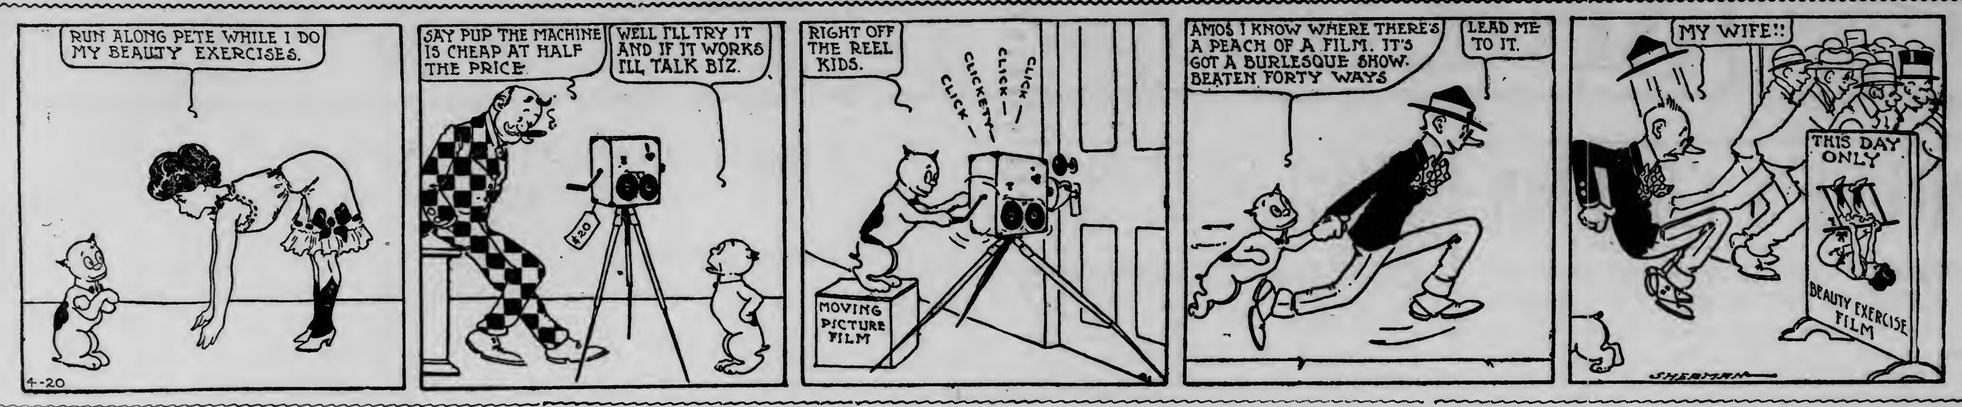
These thoroughly disgraceful proceedings have been widely discussed throughout the country in reference to their effect upon the candidacies of Mr. Taft and Col. Roosevelt. They have not been generally considered as to their effect upon the republican party. And this, we are beginning to think, is their most important aspect.

All these contests will have to be settled. According to the old tradition this settlement will be made upon a basis of control of the republican national committee rather than upon the evidence in the individual cases. Which means that they never will be really "settled" in the sense of being ended.

Think of the political status of a party in a great state in which the voters have seen their presidential preference turned to naught by the trickery of their political leaders. It cannot be united. Men who have been driven out of a convention hall at the point of the bayonet simply are not going to vote for the man whose representatives turned them out. This is human nature, which runs above all party lines.

In other words, the republicans are doing what it has hitherto been the custom of the democrats to do—splitting up their party in different states so bitterly in primary fights that it is impossible to get the factions together against the common enemy at election time. The thing would not be serious if it had broken out merely sporadically. But when the list of "trouble" states includes New York, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, Kentucky, Colorado and other important commonwealths, with prospects of more "trouble" in the future, the time has come for the party to stop and think things over.

Where is the republican party headed today? Looking beyond the Chicago convention, whither will its present internal war carry it?



Chicago Tribune: (It is to be noted in reading this significant editorial that every instance of political outrage cited by the Post is the act of Taft supporters, and that the Taft candidacy was the beneficiary. If by such methods the republican party is rended whose is the fault?)

The Gain of Gardening.

Wall Street Journal: In a show case in front of a downtown seed store hangs the maxim, "Who loves a garden still his Eden keeps." That line not only says to the passerby "Buy seeds," but it also says "Be sane and sentimental enough to realize for yourself the value of the magic touch which comes from contact with the soil." The man who likes the growing plants, whether as a diversion or a duty, is hard to down. The old Greek fable, in which it is told that Antaeus kept himself from being walloped by Hercules by simply managing to touch the ground occasionally, from which his strength came, contains a gospel which needs to be preached from that mythological age to our own millionaire age.

SSSH-- MINNIE'S IN THE MOVIES

By C. L. SHERMAN

TWENTY YEARS AGO

Taken From the Columns of The Herald of This Date, 1892.

S. A. Kemp has resigned his position as freight agent of the Omaha road here and accepted an appointment as dock agent of the Eastern Minnesota at West Superior. G. L. Norton, formerly cashier, has been appointed to succeed him with the Omaha, and W. Gillespie has been made cashier.

It is reported in New York that President Sidney Dillon will be returned at the annual election of the Union Pacific Railroad company, and that Capt. Richard Somers Hayes, now president of the St. Paul & Duluth, will be elected to succeed him.

The condition of marine matters today is much more cheering. The ice has been driven in and is packed pretty solidly for some distance in front of the government entry, but the big boats have little difficulty in getting through it. The outer edge of the ice floe is about fifteen miles down the lake or near Knife Island.

The News contains an announcement today that its proprietorship is now vested in M. A. Hays, who has been its manager during the past two months, he having purchased the interests of Messrs. Mendenhall & Hartley.

Miss Lena Ferguson and Andrew Olson were married this morning at the residence of the bride's parents on Third avenue west. They will reside in West Duluth.

Dr. Slade, the Spiritualistic medium who has been here for several weeks, was ordered out of Duluth yesterday by the police because of disgraceful conduct in his room in the St. Louis hotel. He went to Minneapolis.

Edwin Knight and wife of St. Johnsville, N. Y., arrived in West Duluth last evening. Mr. Knight has formed a partnership with S. C. and C. Murphy in the Sun Publishing business.

The annual meeting of the Duluth Football club last evening elected officers as follows: Honorary president, Simon Clark; active president, J. E. Myers; vice president, Dr. A. E. Walker; captain, A. S. Wilson; vice captain, George Wilson; secretary, A. A. Nicholson; treasurer, William McBean.

 At the annual business meeting of the Mayflower Congregational church, the following officers were elected: Clerk, E. G. Herbert; trustees, Charles Hurd, H. C. Beardsley, E. Possen, E. J. Frost and W. H. Day.

Rev J. B. Larson of West Duluth is dead, aged 68.

George Peters of Saginaw, Mich., an explorer, who has been looking up lands near the Canadian boundary, reports having come across the bodies of two men at Rainy Lake river. It is supposed they perished during one of the severe storms of the first part of the year. One of the dead is believed to be Henry Matthews of Cincinnati, Ohio. The other is unknown. They were 30 to 35 years old.

A WORD FOR THE SOUTH

By SAVOYARD.

Below is a characteristic sneer at the South by the standpat Republican Washington Post, and allow me to observe that except for some of his disreputable friends, who are promoting his candidacy for president of the United States, the Democratic party would be desperately in love with Judson Harmon for refusing to allow John R. McLean's check book to be a candidate for United States senator, a la Cal Brice, in the caucus of the Democratic legislature of Ohio a while ago. Mr. McLean is the owner of the Washington Post and pretends to be a Democrat a la Tartuffe's simulation of a Christian.

After a gibe—that evidences as much ignorance as malevolence, if that were possible—directed against the present Democratic house of representatives, and its ways and means committee, for failure to bring in a bill modifying the cotton schedule because there are some cotton mills at the South, the Post has this to say:

"Iron and steel manufacturers, sugar producers, the chemical trade, wool growers and weavers, together with a multitude of interrelated industries principally of Northern location and development, have been threatened with the harsh process of revision, but the divinity that hedges the South draws the line of demaracation at the thirty-ninth parallel. The blessings of free trade are proclaimed from the housetops, it is true, but not for home consumption. Politicaly pledged to destroy protection, still the South in practice doggedly retains the principle of protection of American industry in its broadest construction.

"While it is obvious that a free trade North and a high protection South soon would enrich the latter beyond the dream of avarice, it is not at all clear that such a consummation demands that Northern congressmen shall beggar the welfare of their constituents in order to boost the one-sided game."

An ignorant reader would infer from the foregoing that the South has a monopoly of the cotton spinning as well as of the cotton growing industry, though it is a fact that the output of the cotton mills of Massachusetts alone is of greater value than the aggregate production of all the cotton mills "south of the thirty-ninth parallel" is worth. Nor is that all. The existing cotton schedule is the conception and the handiwork of a Northerner man, and that man is Nelson W. Aldrich, who saw to it that the bleached fabrics of New England were better protected than the "brown sheetings" of the Carolinas, and here is this henchman of the "borbber barons" of New England delivering itself of a pharisaical whimper—for politics only. The cotton schedule is Aldrichism in the green tree, and nobody but a real Democrat has a right, in decency or in morals, to complain of a failure to reform it and cleanse it of its infamy and its graft.

Perhaps it is necessary to explain to the Post that "robber baron" is an epithet invented by the late John Sherman, who applied it to American capitalists engaged in the manufcture of products protected in our tariff schedules.

The last paragraph of the article quoted from the Post is a gem that nobody but a genius could deliver himself of—and especially is it forcible in the light of the free sugar bill that passed the Democratic house by an overwhelming majority the present session. Turn back and read it, and then call to mind that for more than a century we have had a free trade South and a protected North, if I borrow come "langwidge" from this learned Theban, and it is a thousand to one that from the same pen came the strictures on William Jennings Bryan's onion patch some time ago.

One day the late Zeb Vance, making a powerful speech in the United States senate, complained that North Carolina was hard run because of the great number of paupers she had been required to sustain for a great many years. Mr. Hour of Massachusetts interrupted to correct him like this: "I am surprised to hear the senator make that asseveration, for reliable statistics show that per 1,000 of population there are fewer mendicants in the Old North State than in any other member of the entire federated sisterhood." "Oh," retorted Vance, "it is not our paupers at home who give us concern and impose upon us hardships, but it is the tariff beggars of New England and other communities of the North, whom the law forces us to support, that keep the wolf at the door of North Carolina."

That has been going on ever since section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States was distorted so as to make it permissible for congress to levy taxes on one man and bestow the usufruct on another man. The South being the weaker brother, the junior partner, the minority stockholder, has been robbed under the guise of taxation in every protective tariff we ever had. But the thing would be overturned and reformed if the South were not infested with some tariff beggars of her own, who are just as eager to make money by law, rather than by work, as any of them in New England or Pennsylvania. There is the fly in the ointment, there the worm in the bud.

I think the ways and means committee made a great mistake in putting sugar on the free list. Instead of that, a bill could have been framed that would get $60,000,000 revenue out of sugar, and eliminate every element of protection—except the merest incidental—now enjoyed by the sugar trust, the cane growers and the beet growers. Free sugar is a bluff, and an enormity in the light of taxed wool and taxed lumber.

And the ways and means committee ought to have brought in a bill reforming the cotton schedule, which is exceeded in infamy by the wool schedule, only. It is true that the cotton schedule as it exists affords some protection to the South, that is, an infinitesimal part of the South—the cotton spinners—while it affords much more protection to the North—to the cotton spinners of that section.

One day the great lawyer, James T. Brady, was arguing a brief before the supreme bench of New York. He knew that his client, whom he had not represented in the court below, had failed to make out his case, and in his argument on appeal Mr. Brady gave a resume of the testimony, and when he had finished his side of it, he informed the court, "Here the plaintiff rested." On the instant Chief Justice Church exclaimed in great surprise, "Rested, Brother Brady? Rested! Why did he rest?" "That is a matter, your honor," answered Brady, "that has given me much concern, and I have pestered my poor brains no little to conjecture the wherefore of his pause. Finally I have reached the conclusion that he must have been very much fatigued." Then followed a laugh and the dismissal of the case.

And I have pestered my poor intellectuals no little to surmise why the ways and means committee rested before they fetched in bills reforming the cotton and lumber schedules, and have come to conclude that Mr. Underwood was so greatly fatigued running for president that he was too tired to undertake a battle with the cotton and lumber robbers.

IN THE LITERARY WORLD

THE TERRIBLE MEEK. A play in one act. By Charles Rann Kennedy, author of "The Servant in the House." New York: Harper & Bros. $1 net.

"The meek shall inherit the earth."

The theater is in darkness. Before the curtain rises "a bell from some distant place of worship rings nine brazen notes, far off, out of tune. Then a heavy peal of thunder, and the sharp, cracking strike of a bolt; yet, above all, one other sound, more piercing—a strange, unearthly cry. There follows a mighty howling of wind, blended with a confused clamor of voices and the hurrying of many feet."

As the noises die away, the curtain "rises upon inky blackness."

There is a sudden hush. The silence deepens. "There is a sense of moorlands and desolate places. Far off, a cow lows in her stall. Some lost sheep down in the valley bleats dismally."

The renewed silence is broken by the voice of a peasant woman, weeping bitterly.

Thus begins this remarkable play. We are made aware that besides the woman, there is on this wind-swept, desolate hill a captain, of whose condition and rank we are made aware by his voice. The captain is under some stress of emotion, and his trouble is aggravated when the woman, whom he would help, spurns him because there's the smell of death upon him. A common soldier stumbles up the hill, colliding with the captain. They discuss a terrible event that has just taken place, and it is made clear that somebody has been executed, that the captain had given the order, and that the soldier had been one of the executioners.

In their several ways they consider and discuss this event; the captain, remorseful and fearful, the soldier sullen and fearful but falling back on the fact that it was his "duty" to obey orders. They discuss this duty. The soldier feels pity for the bereaved mother, and for the victim.

"Wot was it 'e done, captain?" he asked in a strongly cockney accent. They don't decipher anything very definite out of it, except that the victim had offended "them long-faced old jossers dahn there"—the priests. He had said something—something that only sounded "loony" to the soldier. They make it clear that in their own minds this Execution has been an unjust thing. But the soldier consoles himself by the thought that he had gotten the victim's boots in the dividing up of his effects, and that these would make a pleasant memento for his "missus." Besides, says the soldier:

It's perfectly plain, sir. After all, duty is duty.

Captain—Yes, it sounds fine to be very much else.

Soldier—'Ow do you mean, sir?

Captain—Well, for instance, it doesn't seem to be love or neighborliness or pity or understanding or anything that comes out hot and fierce from the heart of a man. They! Duty! Duty! Talk of duty! What sort of devil's duties are there in the world, do you think, when they lead blindly, wantonly, wickedly, to the murder of such a man as this!

The conscience of the captain and the conscience of the soldier hold a colloquy together, from which the soldier presently escapes uneasily. Follows a dialogue between the captain and the mother—a wonderful picture of woe. The captain asks her forgiveness, and in his repentence receives it. He says:

I am a soldier. I have been helping to build kingdoms for over twenty years. I have never known any other trade. Soldier, bloodshed, murder; that's my business. My hands are crimson with it. That's what empire means. In the city I come from it is the chief concern of the people. Building kingdoms, rule, empire. They're proud of it. * * * And so we go on building our kingdoms—the kingdoms of this world. We stretch out our hands, greedy, grasping, tyrannical, to possess the earth. Domination, power, glory, money, merchandise, luxury, these are the things we aim at; but what we really gain is pest and famine, grudge labor, the enslaved hate of men and women, ghosts, dead and dead-breathing ghosts that haunt our lives forever. It can't last; it never has lasted, this building in blood and fear. Already our kingdoms are beginning to totter. Possess the earth! We have lost it. We never did possess it. We have lost both earth and ourselves in trying to possess it; for the soul of the earth is man and the love of him, and we hate made of both, a desolation.

I tell you, woman, this dead son of yours, disfigured, shamed, spat upon, has built a kingdom this day that can never die. The living glory of him rules it. The earth is his and he made it. He and his brothers have been moulding and making it through the long ages; they are the only ones who ever really did possess it; not the proud; not the idle, nor the wealthy, not the taunting empires of the world. Something has happened up here on this hill today to shake all our kingdoms of blood and fear to the dust. The earth is his, the earth is theirs, and they made it.

The meek, the terrible meek, the fierce agonizing meek, are about to enter into their inheritance.

This is the climax of the play. The captain and the mother then picture the peace and brotherhood that are to come to the world—some day. The captain, commanded by his general to do another deed of like kind, refuses, knowing that refusal means death.

We have seen this play criticized harshly on two points: that it is sacrilegious to bring so sacred a thing as the Crucifixion upon the stage; and that the play is wearisome.

Is it wrong to make a play of the Crucifixion? No! Not if by so doing a lesson is taught that will help to free those for whom He died. If that is done it is as noble to bring sacred things upon the stage as it is to discuss them from the pulpit. Besides, the bringing in of the Crucifixion is delicately done. Until the close, the play is carried on in pitch darkness. The captain talks like a modern thinking human being, and it is not until an unearthly light floods the stage at the close that he is discovered to be a Roman centurion. The soldier talks in cockney dialect, and it is not until the close that he is found to be a Roman legionary. The Woman is a peasant mother—and until the revelation is made she might typify only universal motherhood, as the playwright manifestly intended she should. The talk of empires in the dialogue might as readily be taken as applying to John Bull's empire as to Caesar's. The Victim—except for the developments later in the play—might be any soldier sacrificed to a war for greed, or any victim of the Moloch of power and empire.

There is no impiety in a stage picture intended to teach the wicked and wanton folly of sacrificing human lives to the ends of greed. There is no sacrilege in a stage picture which impresses upon the public mind the living vitality of the democracy and human brotherhood for which Christ stood, and which teaches again that through Him, and through His living principles only, can the world be saved.

Wearisome? The play, as a literary production, is anything but that. It is appallingly impressive. Differing though it is with weighty critics, we must hold this play to be a work of genius, inspired by lofty ideals and carrying home a lesson which humanity needs to learn. S. H. B.

AN EVENING REVERY IN THE CEMETERY AT WOODLAWN. By John Arnold Keyes. Duluth: F. H. Lounsberry & Co. $1.

The author, in the perfect peace of the only abode of pure peace and pure equality on earth,—a cemetery,—marshals in his mind the pageant of human evolution. In this place of the dead the only sign of earthly pomp are the pretentious monuments of the rich:

Even there a pride of conquest still observe
In pillared monument of sculptured stone,
The last expiring effort to preserve
A name, if only that, and that alone.

From the potter's field on the hill beyond comes the answer:

Yet, on yon hillside, where unnumbered dead
In nameless narrow confines thickly lie,
All might as well be lain, their names unread—
No tomb the wreck of time can e'er defy.

Here all are equal, and no "pillared monument" can make it otherwise:

Here high and low repose in equal calm;
No rights bestow or longer rights deny.
The summer's zephyr wafts to all its balm;
The winter's blast o'er all its snow heaps high.

In the thinker's mind, in this beautiful spot, the scroll of time unrolls its tale from man's primitive struggles down the ages, through which march across the stage for an instant the worshippers of Osiris, "Rome's haughty legions," "those who first sought liberty—first caught its light upon the helmet crest," and so to the future:

For there shall live in ages yet to be,
Remolded from an infinite design,
A man superb beyond our gift to see,
Our cruder ways to soften and refine.

The quicker pulsing of whose vibrant brain
Shall far-sought mysteries of life unfold;
Whose softer heart will make a new refrain
Of brotherhood beyond the ages old.

* * *

Thus runs the slow evolving life of man
Along the steep ascent to final things,
And from a part of the unfolding plan
That from the eternal source of order springs.

A notable conception, this modern Gray's Elegy, inspired by lofty ideals of human brotherhood as the vital force that yet shall realize the visions of the dreamer. There is real poetry of power in it, and it deserves the handsome decking out the printer has given it. Unusually fine photogravure work appears in the half dozen views of the Winona burying ground whose beauty inspired this epic elegy and prophecy.

THE MONTESSORI METHOD. By Maria Montessori, transalted by Anne E. George. New York: Frederick A. Stokes company. $1.90 postpaid.

It has been the pleasure of certain critics of feminine activity to declare that women should confine their efforts to the training of children that they are better qualified for it than are men. In another vein, Mark Twain once suggested that when one compares the care expended in teaching children mentally deficient with the haphazard way in which normal children are taught, one is tempted to believe that it would be better if all children were born mentally deficient, that they might receive greater care in their education.

In the Montessori Method both of these views are met, for the method is that of a woman, and she apparently has solved the problem of how to give proper attention to the training of the normal child. The account of her work in Italy is not entirely new, having been published in McClure's Magazine. But the volume as now given to the public includes two chapters written especially for the American edition.

To one who has read even portions of the earlier published accounts of the Montessori method, no recommendation of the book is necessary. To others it may be interesting to quote a few sentences from the introduction written by Henry W. Holmes of Harvard university. He says:

"No other woman who has dealt with Dr. Montessori's problem—the education of young children—has brought to it personal resources so richly diverse as hers. * * * Certain aspects of the system are in themselves striking and significant; it adapts to the education of normal children methods and apparatus originally used for deficients; it is based on a radical conception of liberty for the pupil; it entails a highly formal training of separate sensory, motor and mental capacities; and it leads to rapid, easy and substantial mastery of the elements of reading, writng and arithmetic."

He distinguishes between the Montessori method and the kindergarten thus: "Whereas the Montessori children spend almost all their time handling things, largely according to their individual inclination and under individual guidance, kindergarten children are generally engaged in group work and games with an imaginative background and appeal." The comparison with kindergarten work is inevitable, since the Montessori method is employed with children from 3 to 6 years of age."

The breadth of the appeal which the Montessori method cannot fail to have is easily realized when one notes that the system here explained is adaptible not only to the school, but to the home. In fact the conditions under which Dr. Montessori has proved the value of her method by actual practice have been such as to make them more readily adaptable to home life than to school life as the latter is known in America. At the same time there is an infinite amount of material here that can be utilized by the American teacher, and which, if so utilized, will make her better qualified to guide the minds and hands of the little human bits that are placed in her care.

But one of the chief points that give the Montessori method a value is that it it not merely a theory, but a practice. It has been weighed in the balance, and while its founder confesses that it does not do all that she hopes it will do when it has been perfected, it has been proved to be far in advance of the haphazard systems, or lack of them, that exist in so many American homes.

THE BIG FISH. By H. B. Marriott Watson, author of "Hurricane Island," "The Castle by the Sea," etc. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.25 net.

This British novelist returns in this story to the field of exciting romance in which "Hurricane Island" showed him to be so successful. And he tells a rattling good story, even if in parts it is not so convincing as his earlier success.

A young man sought shelter one day from the rain in an auction room, and an impulse induces him to pay two guineas for a lacquered box. It turns out that this ordinary looking box holds the secret of a vast buried treasure of the Incas. The young man and an adventurous friend find this out when they catch a man trying to burglarize his quarters, and they accept a proposal from the burglar to go to South America and find the treasure. In the expedition which they undertake, treachery, villainy, violence, love, heroism and sudden death play their parts. There is no letup to the interest, and the rapid action and dramatic working out of the tale can safely be guaranteed to absorb even a jaded reader.

JOSEPH VANCE. By William De Morgan. New York: Grosset & Dunlap. 50 cents.

This, the marvelous first work of this English novelist who found himself at an age when most men are retiring from active pursuits, comes now in a chead edition, the second stage in the career of all successful novels. With its reminiscence of Dickens and its wonderful pictures of real and convincing human life, the book is worth while, whether it is bought for $1.75, the original price, or 50 cents, the present price.

Among the Magazines.

The May Woman's Home Companion contains a most interesting account of the recent dramatization and staging of Louisa M. Alcott's "Little Women." It is quite a remarkable story—how Miss Alcott's heirs have objected for years to putting the story on the stage, but how at last they have consented. Among the other articles in the number are the following: "Seeing Europe on $2.50 a Day," "A Mother's Account of the Effect of the Boy Scout Movement on Her Son," "Women Writers as Humorists," "How to Attract Birds" and "The first of a series on the American girl by J. Nilsen Laurvik. On the fiction side, the leading contributions are from athleen Norris, Susan Glaspell, Annie Hamilton Donnell and Mary Heaton Vorse. In the practical dressmaking, housekeeping and entertainment departments, among which are articles on "Sensible Shoes," "The Healthy Baby," "The Practical Kitchen," "How to Make a Sun Dial," "How to Make a Summer Shack," "The Appetizing Beefsteak," and "A Dozen Good Desserts."

Among the features in the New England number of Life are a center page cartoon by Jacobs, entitled "Old Home Week," a colored cover by McDonall of the landing of the Pilgrims as it doubtless ought to have been; "The Parcels Post," a striking half-tone laid somewhat in the future, and a great number of things about Yankees in general. Boston is very lightly touched upon; religions of the presumably New England variety are exploited, and altogether this number is thoroughly American in its atmosphere if its reliability, however, is questionable. Life itself disclaims this and remarks that there is probably not a reliable thing in it—which all makes for the joy of nations.

"Chains," by Fred Jackson, opening novelette in May Young's Magazine, while written in a brisk, delightful style, has a deep significance. The little heroine, but 16 when the story opens, has a personality so full of charm and originality that she easily holds the center of interest despite the vitality of other well-drawn characters. Germaine, reared as simply as a convent maid in a garden just outside Paris, can only guess at life as glimpsed in her mother's Bohemian household. One sunny day, over her garden wall comes a boy bringing dreams of the outer world and love's first whisper. All the tempestuous nature of the girl responds and it seems that her uneventful life will drift into early matrimony. But suddenly tragedy stirs in this peaceful Eden. Germaine discovers that her professed uncle is in realfty her father and that she is the child of unlawful love. In her secret anguish she turns to Garth, a friend of her father's, and the bond thus forged grows into a profound friendship. Her fiance, upon learning the truth of her parentage, is resolved to cling to her, but his mother interferes. This causes a complication which leads to the climax—a climax quick, tense and unexpected. In this fascinating romance the author demonstrates that no life is complete in itself, but each individual affects the life of his fellow-man for good or for evil.

Probably the most important article in the May American Magazine is a complete and dispassionate account of the great strike at Lawrence written by Ray Stannard Baker. Another important contribution is a statetment of the relations between Taft and Roosevelt contributed by William Allen White, under the title, "Should Old Acquaintance Be Forgot?" Other articles are: "Freak Plays That Have Decided Baseball Championships," by Hugh S. Fullerton; "The New Stagecraft," by Walter Prichard Eaton; "La Follette's Autobiography," and "The Irresponsible Woman and the Friendless Child," by Ida M. Tarbell. Notable among the pieces of short fiction in the number are: "Bringing the Years," by Kathleen Norris, author of "Mother;" "His Upward Step," by Marion Hill, and "The Man Who Knew Life," by Philip Curtiss.

In the "Interesting People" department there are two unusual short articles, one about N. C. Hanks, a sightless, armless lecturer who made a great success in the world after one of the most horribdle catastrophes that ever happened to a man. There is also an account of James A. Durkin, the most famous office boy in the world. In the office of a great Chicago daily he has been for years the universal encyclopedia, directory and autocrat. The story of Jimmy Durkin is good, amusing reading.

Topics closely associated with human interests and human welfare characterize the May number of Popular Mechanics Magazine. To the people as a nation Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary's article on "What the World gains by the Discovery of the Poles," makes a strong appeal. The discoverer of the North Pole declares that the United States should grasp its opportunity in the Antarctic by establishing there a station for the purpose of continuous magnetic, meteorological, astronomical and other scientific observations by a small party of experts. The article is profusely illustrated and gives a clear idea of the relative positions of the several Antarctic expeditions in the field at the time Amundsen attained the South Pole. The city man longing for release from monotonous indoor life, but wary of the risks involved in a change of occupation, will take great interest in Gardner Mack's article on "The Hope in the Hoe." Problems, difficulties and disappointments to be met in the change from city to farm life, by the average man, are impartially discussed, while the benefits and returns are shown to be the result of hard work and the "soil instinct." Many illustrations accompany the article.

With all of the welcome of a gentle April shower the National Magazine for the current month comes to the readers with an array of good things. In "Affairs at Washington" there is that face-to-face discussion of national politics that grow in interest as the presidential campaign proceeds. A stirring article on "Navy Yard Consolidation" is contributed by George F. Sydowers. A large installment appears of "The Minor Chord," the life story of an American prima donna. In the "Nobility of the Trades" the vocation of the farmer is exhaustively treated. George Wharton James forcefully describes "The Influence of California Upon Literature."

The joyous, fragrant breath of spring tingles through this May number of Ainslee's. With thoughts turning persistently to the open, there will be sure appeal in such stories as "The Flying Diver," by Joseph Ernest, thrillingly narrating with a delightful mixture of adventure and romance, an incident of an aviation meet in Paris; Thomas P. Byron's "Kid Pink and the Maharaja," in which the destinies of a Western cowboy and an Indian king are most humorously and fantastically tangled up owing to their being astral twins; and Anna Alice Chapin's rollicking, tender, sparkling story "The Scratch Company," relating the unexpected advent of four opera stars in a little traveling company in order to help out a beloved but financially embarrassed impresario.

To the issue of Harper's Weekly for April 13 Edward Hungerford contributes an interesting article upon the Pennsylvania coal mines. In the same number A. Maurice Low writes upon the introduction of the "Continental Sunday" at the capital. William Inglis contributes an amusing account of the spring circus. Hamilton Wright explains what San Francisco is doing in preparation for her great exposition. Robert G. Skerrett writes upon a newly discovered cause of collisions at sea. This issue contains an interesting story by Victor Rousseau, together with editorials, humor, and financial features.

COMMENT AND DIVERS DISCUSSION OF THE MERRY WORLD OF SPORT.

ROWING is scheduled to start in earnest today, weather and aqua pura permitting, or if they prevent, some time the first part of next week. All of which calls for the question of the hoodoo hanging over the local crews. Will Duluth succeed in winning the junior eight event this season? Those with the right answers are requested to call and leave them on the S. E.'s desk. As things are stacked, Duluth should pull down the junior derby without pulling out any riggers. But luck, something mysterious, has not behaved at all well in the past, and the jinx must be kidded into carelessness and then firmly knocked into the state of coma.

Up at Kenora the game little bantams should have won. The hoodoo was there. The next day the little Duluth crew went out in the junior four event and rowed all around the crews that had beaten them the day previous—but the real race was, as has been stated, the day before.

Last year it looked like a set-up for the local junior eight. The bunch went out and rowed like sailors going to work after late revelry. The crew traveled slower than in any of the time spins—but, as has been intimated, the race was the real test.

The next day the eight went out in the senior event and beat out the crack St. Paul crew and finished a length behind the great Con Riley eight—again the regular turn of the persistent But.

At St. Paul in 1909 Dr. Frank Lynam and Murray Peyton sent down one of the gamest and fastest junior crews that has been developed here for some time. Maybe it was persistent ill luck, and maybe it was the hoodoo, but the Winnipeg junior eight of that season was one of the best in the history of the Northwestern International association racing. But—well, you have to look out for just such unpleasant happenings.

Ten Eyck knows his little book. He has some tried veterans and he is on the pole course; on the pole in that St. Paul end must develop different kind of material than the club had last season to get together a winning crew, and Winnipeg, through the winning of the junior event, must develop another green crew.

Jimmy says he is going to tame the jinx this season or beat it to death. Two rows per diem after the season gets under way, besides sleep and food and mental stimulant.

There are a lot of us that hope this is going to be the year that the eight wins the cup that has been hanging on the hope peg since the oldest resident can recall.

THE big wrestling show of Thursday brought the season to an end. During the present season of indoor sports the fans here have witnessed two bona fide championship matches, besides some contests in which the stars of the mat have participated. That the fans of the city appreciate the sport has been shown by the large crowds that have attended most of the matches.

It is a shame, for the sake of the sport, that Alex Jarvinen, the young Finnish giant, was not brought here earlier in the year. He is by far the greatest wrestler his race has produced, and in addition he seems to be an intelligent young fellow. If Duluth really ever gets a wrestler of proven class, one able to meet the best in the world on even terms, the game will enjoy a great boom here.

IT SEEMS inevitable that Wolgast and McFarland must meet some day to settle once for all the question of supremacy that has been agitating the fight public for the past few years. If Wolgast beats Rivers and McFarland conquers Wells it doesn't seem possible that the two contenders will be kept apart.

Wolgast can make 128 pounds, according to the best of authority. Racy rumor gathered along the pugilistic pathway says McFarland cannot come in strong at a poundage less than the 135 mark. Even at that the Chicagoan insists upon the weighing being done in the afternoon.

But for all the difference of pounds, for two pounds are vast arguments among men as small as the two great little fighters, the purse will be one of the greatest ever hung up for little men and will be an inducement for a financier like Ad Wolgast.

In a finish fight most followers of the fight game believe that Wolgast will be returned the winner. All the way up to the twenty round mark most of the wise followers of the records of the two men are of the McFarland hunch. Both have their followers—that is just what makes the demand for the fight so pressing.

Jimmy Cofforth of San Francisco wants the fight; so do a lot of other promoters. New York managers would be glad to stage it and so would Uncle Tom McCarey of Los Angeles. The promoter securing the signatures of Tom Jones and Emil Thiry, managers for Wolgast and McFarland, will no doubt have to kick in with a luscious and towering pile of blue chips.

THE problem of placing Duluth on the sporting map is a serious one. We are making progress, some of the commmittee of citizens, report. Jim Flynn was in our midst the present week, and whether he has a chance with Johnson or not, he is at the present the most talked of white pugilist in the world.

There can be no doubt but that he is earnest. He believes he is going to beat Johnson, but after looking at the comparatively small figure of the fighting fireman, one wonders how even so an unconquerable spirit as that possessed by Flynn can overcome so large a handicap as the physical advantages of Johnson.

Some day some of the real estate men or some of the others wishing to give us a touch of advertising or big sporting events, may decide to hold a big aeroplane meet here. If we had a track there might be a big auto race here and Duluth would appreciate it, too.

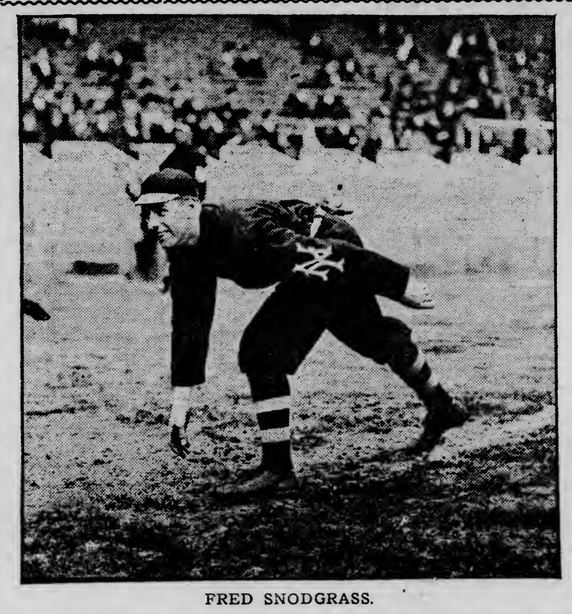
Everybody says Duluth is bound to grow. Perhaps some day we will have a big league baseball team and a race track and a lot of other things. Some of us are optimists and our geneological tree shows longevity as one of the dominant characteristics. But with the passing of time comes ennui of the bushes and bushers.

MINNESOTA TEAM IS DEMORALIZED

Conference Ruling Makes Baseball Prospects the Worst in Years.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 20.—Minnesota's baseball prospects received a death blow yesterday when Coach Sullivan's squad of thirty-five men went before the eligibility committee headed by Prof. James Paige. After a searching cross-examination, but six men swore to the statement it was necessary for them to make in order to be declared spotless in the light of the big eight conference rules.

Before commencing the investigation Prof. Paige gave the squad a talk in which he made it very plain that the rules would be enforced to the letter. He had not progressed very far when Garberg, a candidate for pitcher, voluntarily got up and left the room. About three minutes more of the talk was all that was needed to convince half a dozen more that there cases were hopeless, and Capt. Sutton, Doyle, Wines and other stars withdrew. From that time on the candidates filed out at intervals of a minute or two until but a dozen remained. The scorching questions rapidly reduced this number and when it came to signing the required statement but six candidates remained. The men who remained were Doermann, Lambert, Gilbert, McNally, Shapere and Raymond. The committee let these men have the distinct understanding that nothing would be settled definitely until Friday, but these are the only ones who have a chance.



Stumble on Rule 13.

The particular hoodoo was conference rule No. 13, which provides that no student shall be allowed to emopete as representative of his college if he has at any time taken part in an athletic contest for any organization other than one connected with his college, either during term time or vacation, unless he first secured the written consent of the athletic authorities of the university. It made no difference with the committee how technical the infraction of this rule, those who admitted violating it were promptly told their cases were hopeless.

Coach Sullivan refused to comment upon the result, saying merely, "I haven't anything to say under the circumstances. It would be rather hard to get a team out of six men."

The news of the wholesale slaughter of the baseball candidates spread quickly and if these was any doubts as to the stand the students will take about remaining in the big eight, that doubt has been removed. The male students will vote almost unanimously to immediately leave the conference and form such new athletic relations as are open to the university under a sound athletic policy.

ILLINOIS HAS INELIGIBLE TEAM

Students Ruled Out of Conference Athletics to Play Baseball Games.

Urbana, Ill., April 20.—In order that there shall be no conflict with the summer baseball rules recently vetoed by the conference delegates in a meeting at Chicago, University of Illinois students have organized two teams, one of amateurs and the other of ineligibles, or students who have been barred from further playing by conference ruling. A manager has been selected for the "ineligibles," and games will be scheduled with Notre Dame, Michigan and other outsiders, independent of the varsity nine.

Illinois faculty authorities have not as yet made an investigation of the new move here, but it is thought that if nine students want to play ball on Saturday the university will be powerless to stop them. The "ineligibles" lined up against the varsity yesterday and showed their class from the start, trimming the university representative team, 9 to 3.

Faculty sentiment against present conditions in the conference is said to have been stiffened by the action of the University of Chicago in permitting Capt. Boyle to play after dispatches named him as a member of a team at Gary, Ind.

While the university senate deferred final action on the conference situation, it is said that stubborn members are beginning to be convinced that Illinois is being "double-crossed." Capt. Boyle, by playing on a team on which semi-pro players were paid, broke the summer ball rule, it is declared, even if he had permission and was not paid. Light, the crack Illinois infielder, was barred recently for a similar offense. Wallace, second baseman, protested by Iowa, has been dropped by the Illinois committee. Wallace "fessed up," as have all the Illinois men dismissed.

SOME GREAT PUBLICITY MEN IN THE SPORT PROMOTING GAME

Johnson, Battling Nelson, Madden and the Late Willus Britt Ranked As Great Press Agents and Publicity Getters.

"Publicity getters" may be coining new phrases for the men who are back of the scenes with the fighters, but it is unquestionably the most expressive way of referring to men who are more than press agents and really have much to do with the success or downfall of the chap who is in the ring. Quite frequently you run across a fighter who knows more about the game than the ordinary manager, but that is the exception rather than the rule.

In this day, when the modern fighter is in pursuit of the nimble dollar, when his prowess in the ring is altogether a commercial transaction, the question of keeping in the public eye is one that he needs to consider, first of all. A champion, of course, can do with less of the personally sought publicity than the man who is not so much in the limelight, but champion or no champion, space in the newspaper is as valuable to the pocketbook as it is pleasing to the taste.

Years ago, trained energy directed at getting into the papers was a thing not so seriously regarded. Today there is hardly a fighter in the land but will make a beeline to the newspaper offices the first thing he hits a city, or have his manager do the same thing for him.

The same sort of training comes to the boxing promoters as well as to the fight manager, for while the fight manager is engaged in the task of keeping his protege or charge well known, the promoter, with an ear to the box office, wants his show dinned into the minds of the readers of the sporting pages, many of whom are doubtless patrons of the fistic game.

There are many tricks of the trade that the public never appreciates and that only the newspaper man who comes in contact with those innumerable "publicity getters" is able to realize and appraise at their full values.

Knockout Brown of New York is a fair example of a fighter whose drawing powers are enhanced because of the space he has been accorded. From all indications, Knockout Brown is anything but a man of first rank in the lightweight division. At the same time there are few fighters in the land, barring Wolgast, who would draw better houses. The reason? K. O. Brown is known to practically every man who likes to read boxing gossip.

Of what one might term the modern fight managers, there will be little controversy among newspaper workers in placing the late William Britt in the first rank. Britt had a newspaper training that was invaluable to him, since it taught him to understand what the newspapers and the sporting editors would want, he had served a long apprenticeship first of all with Jimmy Britt to handle, he was endowed with good nature and a pleasing personality, but above all, he never knew when to quit, says Harry B. Smith.

"Get my fighter's name in your paper, I don't care so much what you say about him," Britt would argue, and in the main he was right.

James Edward Britt was a good subject to work upon, and the experience that he thus gained Willis used to good advantage in his handling of Stanley Ketchel and Battling Nelson.

Britt's Spectacular Stunts.

When Britt adopted Ketchel and became his manager, the middleweight champion was not so easy to approach from a newspaper standpoint. He didn't appreciate the value of space, and was likely to be inaccessible just when some newspaper chap wanted to see him. Further, he wasn't as much in touch with the public as Britt desired.

All that was changed.

Willis started the Michigan assassin to throwing nickels to the newsboys on the street as a preliminary, and adopted other outlandish forms of attracting attention.

Away from San Francisco for a time, Britt would arrange to the re-entrance in spectacular style. Time and again a tallyho would be engaged, along with a brass band, and with Ketchel in the driver's seat, the cavalcade would march up Market street and to one of the leading hotels, where Ketchel would register.

Were the newspaper photographers wanting pictures, or the pugilistic writers seeking a story of some sort, Britt was always ready to have Ketchel interviewed or to allow himself to be interviewed in case the champion happened to be missing.

There was only one time when Britt wasn't anxious to have Ketchel interviewed, and while it didn't seem humorous at the time, it caused many a laugh afterward.

Ketchel was to have boxed Langford in the East, but the match had been prohibited. There was something mysterious about it all, and in addition, the scribe wanted to know of Ketchel if he was afraid of the Boston middleweight.

Britt had the situation figured out to a nicety, and while crossing the bay had given instructions to Ketchel to drift out of sight and let the manager do the talking.

Stanley was willing enough, but, as the best laid plans so often fo astray, so did this one. Somebody saw the fighter as he dodged across the street, the cry went up, and the few people who happened to be at the ferry, saw the spectacle of some four or five newspaper men industriously engaged in the pursuit of S. Ketchel. They finally caught up with that discomfited pugilist, and while he didn't say much, that little was decidedly interesting.

Incidentally, Willis Britt was deeply chagrined that he couldn't make his own explanations of the New York affair.

But, all in all, Willis Britt was to be called a great publicity getter, for there was meat to his news, and he saw to it that it was worth while using.

Of the fighters themselves, the general public will doubtless consider Battling Nelson as the foremost of the self-advertisers, although, if the truth be known, Jack Johnson is as shrewd in that line, and somewhat more diplomatic.

Johnson Shrewd Judge.

Time was when J. Arthur Johnson would climb the stairs of a newspaper office with his story of fights that he wanted, but all that changed when he won the premier honor. Instead, the newspaper men followed Johnson.

But, be it said to the credit of the black champion, that in spite of his ring successes, he never lost track of the main idea to keep himself in touch and in the papers. Never, even in those final days at Reno before his fight with Jeffries, was Johnson too busy to see a sporting writer who had business with him. His boxing was done on scheduled time, and he was far too well versed to keep his audiences waiting for any length of time.

His automobile speeding stunts and the other eccentricities that he occasionally affects are as much a part of his general scheme to keep in print as they are calculated to amuse himself.

More than that, Johnson can make news and is rated about as shrewd a boxer as ever donned tights. There was never a day so quiet in his training experiences, but Johnson could talk himself into the papers.

One afternoon when he was just starting training for Jeffries out at the Seal Rock house, the preliminary news had thinned out and as Johnson wasn't ready to box, it looked extremely quiet. But once again Johnson made good.

"I see this fellow Corbett talks about flatfooted boxers," he said when no one else seemed ready to open the conversation, "well I'm going to tell you something about flatfooted boxers."

And he trailed off into an argument that made good reading.

Battling Nelson, in a way, has been a different sort of advertiser, although a persistent one. Just at present he is confining his work to mailing out copies of the papers in whatever town he may happen to be showing. These papers go to every sporting editor he knows in the United States and the Dane's postage bill must be no inconsiderable item.

As a champion, and particularly after his split with Billy Nolan, Nelson believed in the personal interview, and was frequently to be seen in newspaper offices, talking to the sporting writers, perhaps about the fight game, but always about himself.

He has delved into newspaper work to a certain extent, and when up in the pugilistic world had a string of papers to which he wired (collect, of course) happenings in which the name of Battling Nelson appeared.

Stanley Ketchel, when he came to understand newspapers and newspaper men, was an easy man to interview, although it cannot be said that he was ideal from that standpoint. Stories with him had to be manufactured, and Ketchel was of no assistance in the production of the same.

Wolgast's Change of Heart.

Ad Wolgast was absolutely indifferent to the sporting writers when he first achieved fame, but his viewpoint has changed until today he likes to make the rounds of the papers. Usually, however, he is accompanied by Manager Tom Jones, who does most of the talking, as Wolgast, like others of his profession, is not long on conversation.

Joe Gans was another fighter who depended upon his manager, and while he was acquainted with the writers, rarely did more than answer questions and preferred to talk on any other subject than boxing. For a long time when Al Herford managed the Baltimore lightweight, Herford, as the "ready letter writer," managed to keep his man going, but the letter-writing habit fell into disrepute and is largely abandoned as a wholesale means of advertising a fighter.

Gans never forgot his place, and that trait alone made him a favorite with those who came in contact with him. Terms of a match were never discussed by Gans, who was inclined to leave everything but training and fighting to his handler.

Once, just before his title was transferred to Nelson, Gans requested assistance in framing a letter that he was to send personally to one of the Baltimore papers. The letter was drafted and copied by Gans on his typewriter and mailed to Maryland. And a few days later there came a word of thanks from Joe, who in true colored fashion concluded: "Hoping this finds you well as it leaves me feeling fine. Yours truly, "JOE GANS."

Going to the other extreme, the worst man in the pugilistic game from the standpoint of the papers was James J. Jeffries. Other fighters perhaps have failed to be of assistance, but it was generally because they didn't understand how, rather than from any desire to be obstinate.

Jeffries, particularly in training for Johnson, was a cross to every man who was detailed to cover his camp. Whether Jeff took a fiendish delight in blocking the men who ought to have been working with him is not known, but he succeeded beautifully, whether or no.

Now, these writers didn't care a whoop personally, but they had to have that news for their papers. But do you suppose they were informed when Jeffries would do this or that? Not a bit of it. They were sometimes more at sea than the general public, and simply had to do the next best thing—watch Jeffries from the moment he came out of the house in the morning until he went to bed at night.

You may remember that Jeffries boxed when he pleased and didn't often please. One day, without any notice, he did his boxing at 7 o'clock in the morning. Not more than half a dozen of the fraternity happened to be on hand. For the balance of the week there were rumors flying that Jeff would box in the early morning before it was too hot. That necessitated an early breakfast, but for all the men who gathered each morning at Moano Springs there was no boxing. And when Jeffries did consent to spar, it happened to be in the afternoon.

Berger's Advertising Stunt.

Apropos of Jeffries, Sam Berger pulled off a good advertising stunt while Jeff was on the theatrical circuit that has never been exploited. It was before Jeffries had finally decided whether he would fight Johnson. The theatrical attraction was losing interest and one morning in a Canadian city Berger called a newspaper man aside and confidently whispered that he might be able to get him a good story.

"Mind you," he said, "don't let me appear in this, but it is straight that Jeffries will not fight the coon. He has tried himself and feels certain that he can't get into shape."

Rest assured that the story went broadcast over the country, Berger and Jeffries were on the way to New York and all day they were flooded with telegrams asking for corrobation or denial.

Jeffries raged and wanted to find the man who had started that story. Berger chuckled, flatly denied the rumor, but gained his point. When the train reached New York there were a score of newspaper men on hand for an interview with Jeffries. They got their interview, and the Californian once more was played up in the headlines.

Of the old-time managers there was no better press agent than Billy Madden. Remember when Billy Madden was managing Gus Ruhlin and had him in Portland some years ago? Jeffries was in San Francisco, and they were trying to arrange for a match.

Jeffries would make a statement one day and Ruhlin would reply via Madden the next. The thing kept up for three weeks and became so irksome to Madden that he finally conceived a new plan.

"See here," he said to the reporter who was working on the story. "It's all waste energy to look me up every time you get a telegram from San Francisco. You just fix up an answer for Ruhlin and it goes for me. You know what to say."

So it happened that the venomous replies from the Rhulin end probably were never even read by the Akron giant. But the match was made and the result achieved.

No story of this sort would be complete without mentioning Jas. W. Coffroth, who is hailed as the premier promoter of today. Coffroth formerly used a press agent, but today he is a firm believer in the personal equation. Outside of handling his own billboard advertising, Coffroth has invented many schemes to spur on the jaded appetites of the men who write the boxing news.

It was Coffroth, for example, who conceived the idea of having the referee pay an official visit to each camp to talk over the rules. He is never too busy to head a party to a camp where one of his boxers may be in training.

There probably isn't a promoter in the world who keeps more fully in touch with fighters, managers and sporting editors. His correspondence is a task on his energy, for he makes it an invariable rule to answer every letter, always remembering that perhaps the man who has written may some day be a champion in his class.

McCAREY OFFERS VERY BIG PURSE

Los Angeles, Cal., April 20.—It takes a real championship match to command a purse offering of $25,000. That is what it is costing Uncle Tom McCarey to swing the Ad Wolgast-Jose Rivers match here on July 4. It's a championship match all right, but the cost of it looks to be out of all proportion to the fight itself.

The amount merely goes to show the flourishing state of affairs pugilistic on the Pacific coast. When lightweights can draw gates of sufficient size to pay guarantees of this sort and leave some safe promoting margin there is much prosperity in sight for the fighter and a pretty safe condition of affairs in the fighting game.

The terms McCarey is giving Wolgast never have been made public, but it is known that the sum demanded by the champion was at least $15,000. And he got it too. As Rivers knows his own worth as a drawing card in Mr. McCarey's arena it is far from doubtful whether he is getting a penny less than $10,000 for his share of the loot.

Morris vs. McCarthy.

Tulsa, Okla., April 20.—Carl Morris, Oklahoma's heavyweight, and Luther McCarthy, Chicago, were matched for a ten-round bout at Springfield, Mo., May 3.

Won't Fall for Conference.

Ann Arbor, Mich., April 20.—That Michigan has any idea of re-entering the Western conference is made known in resolutions adopted by the board in control of athletics at the university. "We would, however, welcome competition with any of our friends now members of the conference," the resolutions say.

No loss of life was caused by the eruption of Mount Etna on Sept. 10, 1911. The entire damage to property and crops is estimated at $2,316,000 to $2,895,000.

A STAR GERMAN RUNNER

BRAUN.

Braun, the wonderful half-miler of Germany, is sure to represent that country at the Olympic games at Stockholm in July. He will be a hard man to beat. Germany also has Rau, the sprinter, and Poehlman, a pole vaulter, who have shown close to world's championship form.

MANY VARIATIONS POSSIBLE IN MODERN GAME OF GOLF

Philadelphia, April 18.—Now that spring has really arrived, golf is the subject of conversation among the lovers of that sport. Possibly there is no game in the world that offers a greater diversity of play than golf. There is but one game of baseball, and the national game is the same in Cuba and the Philippines as it is in the United States. The village team of the backwoods plays the game the same as the world's champions, with, of course, the natural difference that one might expect in the quality of the play. Billiards are billiards the world over, whether it is 18-inch balk or three-carom cushions. Pool offers considerable diversity, but with a great many people pool does not appeal at all, ofttimes because of the unpleasant surroundings.

Football differs materially from the game we watched several years ago, but, save for the class, there is not much difference between the game as played by Yale in the East and Michigan in the West, and Bowdoin up in Maine or Suwanee down South. Yost and other great masters have introduced new wrinkles that have spread all over the country, yet the essentials are the same as they were ten years ago.

Offers Variety.

Of course, with the true dyed-in-the-wool golfer, the man who plays the game scientifically and seriously, and whose name spells more or less fame in the world of golf, even if the hoi polloi are at times inclined to show dense ignorance when our national champion is mentioned, to him golf is the same game it was when he first handled a club. But to the great mass of the 5,000,000 or more who think golf is the one best game in the world, the variety and diversity which the game affords offer something which he cannot get out of any other contest.

Ordinarily, the player has a choice of medal or match play, and in these he may play in two, three or four-ball matches, or in foursome or mixed foursomes. To offset the monotony of the play referred to, some ingenius devisers have from time to time offered varieties of play. Some of these have lasted for a season or two, and then fallen into disuse, while others have been taken up, and are now part and parcel of the game wherever golf is played.

Old Men's Tourney Popular.

It was not so many years ago that one of the Eastern golf clubs thought that a tournament which should be restricted to men past the halfcentury mark might make a great appeal. Here was a class of golfers numbered by the thousands and scattered all over the country. With the younger crowd they had, save in relatively few instances, but little chance of victory. Playing against men of their own age was something that appealed to their sporting instinct. The first tournament did not attract much of a field, but the popularity of the tournament grew to such an extent that the field became almost too bulky to handle. And no golfer is allowed to play in it who is not 55 or over. All others are classed as youngsters, and many of these youngsters, curiously enough, are anxiously waiting the time when they will be able to enter the seniors' tournament. It is not often that we hear of men who are anxious to get old, but here are a lot of youngsters of 53 and 54 just aching to get the old men of 55. What other sport in the world could get out 220 representative citizens in every walk of professional and business life, every one of them at least 55 years old, in any kind of a competition? These seniors' tournaments are now held in all sections of the country.

Father and Son.

Another interesting phase of the game of golf is the father and son tournament. This event originated in the West, but has proved so popular that every part of the country has its annual pater-filius match. It is a handicap foursome match, in which Jones and his son plays against every other father and son. One Western club holds a parent and child tournament each year, in some cases the mother and son played against a father and daughter. This tourney promises to flourish.

Down at Pinehurst, several years ago, the Tin Whistles first started the now very popular tombstone tournament on its way. Today there is hardly a golf club in the country which does not have at least one tombstone tournament during the year. Briefly each player plays against the par of the course. Suppose it were 80. Each player works on his club handicap. As he leaves the tee he is given a card resembling a tombstone, fastened to a small stick. The player who succeeds in planting his card the farthest from the first tee is the winner of the tournament. A man with 15 handicap gets 95 strokes before he plants his card. And when he does plant it he is supposed to write his own epitaph.

Goat Tourney.

The goat tourney is another form of the game which has grown in popularity. It is simply carrying out in golf the old slang term, "getting one's goat." Each player is supplied with a bronze medal, with his name engraved on one side and the figure of a goat on the other. The tournament is at match play on a handicap basis. The men with the higher handicap receives three-fourths of the difference in the handicaps, and receives strokes on certain holes from his opponent. The player winning the match gets the other's goat. The loser has the right to challenge for his goat, but in turn must give additional strokes. If he wins he gets his goat back. If he loses he gives the winner a golf ball. On the Saturday after Thanksgiving day the player having the greatest number of goats in his possession is declared the goat herd, and receives a gold goat. The bronze goats are distributed among their respective owners.

The one-club tournament is another variety of the game that has proved rather popular, more so than the selective club tournament. Some ingenious player conceived the idea of a tournament in which before a player took his stroke he had to select the club for the next stroke. This resulted in many amusing tournaments. It had one bad feature, and that was the possibility of a player using a niblick or mashie on the putting greens. As a result, the green committee sat down hard on this novel tournament.

Of course, in the general run of things, golfers prefer the old game without any frills and furbelows, but to the "dubs," who constitute 70 per cent of the players in this country, these tournaments which have been mentioned make an especial appeal and they tend to relieve the monotony of the ordinary program for the numerous clubs.

CANADIAN NORTHERN EMPLOYE IS KILLED.

Fort Frances, Ont., April 20.—At Mathieu Siding, fifty miles east of Fort Frances, John Dent, aged 55, of the Canadian Northern building and bridge construction gang, was killed Wednesday morning.

Dent was on his speeder and had stopped off with it to allow the local mixed train to back up, and not noticing that another train was passing the opposite way on another track, he was knocked down and run over, both legs being taken off. Medical aid was wired for and a special from Fort Frances was sent up with Dr. Chance of International Falls, but Dent died before the doctor arrived. The body was brought to Fort Frances.

"JOKE" BALL TEAM FOR "U"

All But Six Players Barred —Only Beginners Are Eligible.

Faculty Interference Will Result in Entire Schedule Being Cancelled.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—According to the present outlook Minnesota will have a baseball team consisting of about six men. Out of a squad of about twenty-five who subjected themselves to the questioning of the committee, six passed unscathed. The baseball candidates appeared before the eligibility committee Wednesday afternoon and were summarily dealt with. The examination was extremely exhausting. Of the six only one is an "M" man.

The candidates were carefully instructed in the law by Professor Page, who threatened expulsion to any one who should in any way attempt to evade the rules. A stenographer reported every word of the proceedings and each one was required to give the names of two citizens of his home town, who should verify his testimony. Professor Page declared emphatically that if any of the players had violated the letter or spirit of any of the rules they "had better fade away." Whereupon about half of them picked up their hats and "faded" without waiting to be quizzed. Many of the best players did not even attend the session.

Most of the players fell down before a ruling that had never been heard of, for acts which none ever thought were prohibited. This was rule 13, which reads: "A student shall be ineligible to represent his college in athletic contests, who engaged in such contests as a representative of any athletic organization not connected with his college, whether in term time or vacation, except by special written permission previously obtained of the proper athletic authorities." This rule applies whether such team has a permanent organization or not.

Kills Baseball.

This kills baseball at the university this year and practically for all time. The only one who could possibly be eligible would be one who never played a game in his life. The students are outraged to think that the faculty should attempt to enforce such rules. Helon Leach will recommend that the schedule be cancelled.

Realizing the hopeless conditions of the present system, the newly organized all-university students council has asked the co-operation of all of the class presidents in bringing together the opinion of the students. Definite and concerted action is necessary to bring about reform and this action is under way. With a representative organization such as the council as a central agency, a majority opinion can be obtained. An indication of the result of such inquiry may be shown by the action of the middle laws. At a class meeting held for the purpose they went on record as unanimously in favor of the scholarship and one year residence basis of eligibility and by a vote of about 80 to 3 decided that Minnesota ought to leave the conference.

The whole situation is fraught with complex difficulties, which the students are carefully considering. The question practically resolves itself to this: If Minnesota leaves the conference and adopts a scholarship basis, will Michigan and other teams meet her? Michigan says she will not play Minnesota on such a basis and furthermore Wisconsin and Chicago declare they will abandon inter-collegiate athletics if such a standard is adopted.

Through all of this agitation "Dick" Grant is quietly going ahead with his track team. Most of his men seem to be eligible and every day a large squad under Captain Leonard Frank works out upon the field. A relay team was sent to Drake to the relay carnival to be held there today.

The conference wrestling championship was won by Minnesota at the gymnastic meet held at Illinois university. Minnesota won two first places and two seconds in the wrestling and took third place in the gymnastic events.

It now seems certain that Captain-elect Clifford Morrell will not be allowed to play football next year because he will have received a degree, although he will not complete his course for two years. The rumor was not credited at first, but since the faculty is enforcing all of the joke rules strictly, there seems to be no escape for Morrell. This rule will also bar Jim Walker, the 1910 All-American tackle, who had declared he would play next year. If the university cannot collect enough eligible men to have a baseball team how will it gather enough football men to play next fall under the present conditions, the students ask.

PAL BROWN HAS A SLIGHT LEAD

Hibbing Boy Gets Better of Battling Schultz in 10 Round Go.

Columbus, Ohio, April 20.—Pal Brown of Hibbing had the better of a ten-round bout with Battling Schultz here last night. The Hibbing man excelled at in-fighting and was aggressive from the start. Neither man was groggy during the battle. Brown went down once, more from a slip than the effects of a punch.

There was little to choose between the men at long range fighting. Brown was the first to draw blood, but in the closing rounds the German battler had the Hibbing boy bleeding from the nose.

Brown has an offer to meet Grover Hayes on May 9.

Sullivan's Injury Slight.

Chicago, April 20.—"Billy" Sullivan's collar bone is not broken. An x-ray examination here of the Chicago catcher's shoulder, which was injured in a game at St. Louis yesterday, showed that the shoulder blade merely was dislocated. Physicians said he would be able to resume playing in about two weeks.

During the three following years he served on the Minnesota-Wisconsin circuit and least year was a member of the New York State league arbitrating force.

REFEREES WHO HAVE MADE GREAT NAMES

"It was no easy task in the old days to referee some of the hard battles on the turf, under London rules especially," says Jack Skelly referring to some of the game referees who often risked their lives in their official capacity in the prize ring.

"Probably one of the squarest and most manly of the old referees was Al Smith, who passed in some three years ago at the old Gilsey house, New York, where he lived and was greatly respected for more than 30 years by all classes of sporting and business men.

"Smith, in his younger days, was a natural fighter. When the Civil war broke out he became a lieutenant in the Union army and fought through the war with distinguished bravery. He also was a natural athlete, who would fight at the drop of the hat with his fists. He had many rough and tumble battles in the far West in his early days and never was defeated.

"In 1883 Smith managed John L. Sullivan in his famous knocking tour from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Sullivan and Smith divided about $300,000 as the result of this great tour, which helped to make John L. the most popular champion in the world in his day.

"Smith refereed some memorable ring battles. He was always on the square, and on three occasions he decided his own money away. When Johnny Murphy fought Jack Havlin with skin tight gloves in Hoboken, N. J., about 25 years ago, Smith had a $2,000 wager on Murphy, but he gave the decision in favor of Havlin. When John L. Sullivan met husky Jim Flood on the barge in the Hudson river, opposite New York in 1881, New York sports intended to win by fair or foul means, but Smith, who was the referee, was firm and fearless, and Sullivan was allowed to win on his merits in eight slashing rounds. I tell this interesting story in detail in my little book, 'The Young Fighting Cooper.' It showed Smith's gameness and spirit of fair play.

Last Appearance.

"The last time Smith acted as third man in the ring was at the old Coney Island A. C., in 1892, when Eddie Pierce and George Siddons clashed. During the early part of the fight Pierce looked like a sure winner, and was backed heavily by the club officials; but, as the battle progressed, Siddons, who was a long distance boxer, began to look like a victor. Judge Newton, the matchmaker, called Smith aside between the rounds and told him to declare the fight a draw. 'I'm the referee, Newton,' answered Smith. 'We must have fair play.' Round after round Siddons continued to improve, and finally Newton jumped into the ring himself and proclaimed the contest a draw. Smith immediately left the clubhouse in disgust and declared he would never referee another bout, and he kept his word. He was an honest sport and never accepted a dollar for refereeing any fight. He was certainly the king of sports in this country for more than 40 years.

"Jere Dunn, who died five years ago, was another fearless referee of the old school, whom the square sporting element always hold in high esteem. When Jack McAuliffe fought Austin Gibbons at the old Granite club in Hoboken, N. J., in 1891, Dunn, who officiated as referee, firmly declared himself before the fighters answered the call of time. He had heard it whispered about the ring that in case Gibbons was getting the worst of the mill the Jersey coppers intended to stop it. 'If that is so,' said Dunn, explaining the situation to the big crowd, 'I'll give my decision to the man having the best of it when the interference takes place.' They fought six rounds with McAuliffe far in the lead, when the police jumped into the ring and ended further hostilities. But Dunn was on the job, and quickly stepping to the side of the ring, shouted, 'McAuliffe wins!' The Gibson people pleaded hard with Dunn to call the fight a draw, but he was a game man with an iron will and stuck by his decision.

John Fitzpatrick.

"John Fitzpatrick, who afterward became mayor of New Orleans, was a square, manly referee. The last great battle he officiated at was the seventy-five-round contest between John L. Sullivan and Jake Kilrain at Richburg, Miss., in 1889. This was also the last bare-knuckle championship match held under the old London rules, on the turf. Fitzpatrick declared it was the hardest task he ever tackled, pulling the big fellows apart with the thermometer registering 115 in the shade. The ex-mayor never refereed another battle.

"In the old bare-knuckle days many a referee took his life in his hands when he undertook to decide the fine points of a fight with two desperate mobs, armed to the teeth, wrangling and ready to take any unfair advantage for their man. It was generally a case of win, tie or wrangle in most of these tough affairs.

"When Frank P. Slavin fought Jem Smith at Bruges, Belgium, in 1889, the big husky Australian got much the worst of the deal from Joe Versey, the referee, who was bluffed and bullied by the rough Birmingham mob, which was in control of the ring. Versey did not dare go against the crowd, who struck Slavin with sticks and knuckle-dusters in order to rob him of a just victory. Slavin and Smith fought fourteen desperate rounds, and it was Slavin's fight from start to finish. Slavin, however, was lucky getting away with his life. The Pelican club of London expelled Squire Abingdon for his connection with this disgraceful affair. At the same time it also recovered Slavin's money and decided him the winner. The weak-hearted referee was also disgraced and was never afterward allowed to preside at any other important contest.

The official referees under the new Frawley law have quite a picnic compared to the old-timers who took such risks in those fierce, brutal contests in the backwoods. I have for many moons advocated the rendering of decisions by the new referees. It would stop a lot of these draws and compel the boys to fight for a verdict. It's quite easy, you know, to referee a bout when you don't have to render a decision, but when you have to give a verdict on a close contest it requires rare judgment and some knowledge of the rules and the art of boxing."

EUROPEANS ARE IMITATING US

American Athletic Methods to Figure Largely in Training Foreigners.

Chicago, April 20.—American athletic methods will figure heavily in the Olympic games at Stockholm this summer, according to the prediction of James Lightbody, the former university star athlete, who returned to the Midway yesterday after four years in Germany. The Chicago star, who has become famous throughout Europe for his athletic exhibitions and sensational marks, declared that the influence of American training would be seen in the work of the foreign teams as well as in the performance of the American competitors.

Lightbody has toured Europe during his stay abroad, carrying the gospel of advanced athletics into practically every country on the continent. He has lectured before all the leading athletic clubs and has brought back a trunkful of medals secured in amateur races. Coach Stagg's old pupil affirms that the athletic system in the United States is not even approached in the foreign cities.

Trainer for German Athletes.

The old Midway star told his friends that the German runners who will appear in the Olympic games will follow his own teachings. As a member of the German athletic union he has come into contract with all the leading German track men and many of them have taken his advice in matters of training.

"The Germans are not good athletes in the sense that Americans are," Lightbody declared. "They have had ideas on training, but are beginning to cut them out to some extent. For instance, the beer habit is pretty general in Germany, but many of the younger men are now turning to soft drinks instead of beer. Needless to say, this is an advance as far as athletics is concerned.

"I have used American methods abroad, together with some hints from the English system. The English idea of sport for pleasure appeals to the German mind and I think will become popular."

Lightbody attained the unusual honor of winning both the half mile and mile runs in the international European track meets of 1908, 1910 and 1911 at Berlin. He was kept out of the meet in 1909 by an injured knee. This record gave him an undisputed title throughout Germany as an athlette wonder and resulted in his training some of the foremost athletes.

The star will have the honor of taking two German princes to the Olympic games. They are the Princes Frederick Charles and Sigismund, whose mother is the sister of Emperor Wilhelm. He has been instructing the princes for the last two years and they have become excellent runners under his tutelage.

May Enroll at Chicago.

It is possible that Lithbody may become a student at the Midway school again, as he still lacks one course and wishes to take a degree from the institution. He will interview the deans today and will take the course by correspondence if possible. If not, he may decide to take part of the work this spring and finish up at some future time.

Lightbody became noted as a conference whirlwind when he captured the mile and half mile in the 1905 conference meet at Marshall field. He continued to shine in Western athletics until his departure for Europe early in 1908.

GIANTS OPEN AT HOME BY DEFEATING BROOKLYN.

New York, April 20.—The Giants opened their season here yesterday by defeateing the Brooklyn team in a hard-hitting game, 6 to 2. Cold weather kept the attendance below the usual opening game figures. The Giants knocked Rucker out of the box. Errors by Stark and Daubert, a wild pitch and a stolen base put Devore and Shafter on second and third with none out in the first. Both runners scored on Murray's single. After Murray was thrown out stealing, Merkle hit for a home run. Schardt was also hit rather hard, but he kept the Giants' hits scattered.

Mathewson was presented with an automobile before the game, and though he yielded thirteen hits, he pitched a steady game.

The great throws by Murray, one cutting off a run at the plate and another retiring a man at third, saved Mathewson, when it looked as though Brooklyn would start dangerous rallies. A great catch by Daly and the hitting of Daubert were other features. McGraw was benched in the fourth, and in the following inning was ordered to the club house by Umpire Finneran. Police Commissioner Waldo presented Mathewson with the automobile, a gift of the New York fans, and also threw out the first ball.

WIFE OF GOVERNOR TENER THROWS FIRST BALL.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 20.—The National league season here was opened yesterday afternoon under adverse weather and ground conditions which kept the attendance down. The first ball was thrown by Mrs. John K. Tener, wife of the governor of Pennsylvania. The home team won the game by knocking Mattern off the rubber in the third inning. Manager Dooin of Philadelphia was confined to his home with an attack of intestinal trouble. He was brought here from New York and the physicians are hopeful that it will not be necessary to operate upon him. Score: R. H. E.

WASHINGTON OPENING MARRED BY WEATHER.

Washington, April 20.—Cold weather and the Titanic disaster played havoc with the Washington club's opening of tht season here yesterday. The former kept many of the fans at home and the latter was responsible for the absence of many notables of social and government circles.

President Taft has many affairs at Washington's opening at home and with him generally came Major Butt, diplomats and leaders of the capital's social set.

Walter Johnson was in brilliant form and Washington had an easy time, shutting out the Athletics 6 to 0. Three hits were registered by the champions and eight perished by the strikeout route. The locals hit Brown hard and timely, a double by Ainsmith in the fifth inning, which struck lost in the sun, scoring three runs. Errors by Baker at third were costly, his fumble of McBride's roller in the fifth inning should have made the third out, but instead four runs came over the plate before the final man was retired. The Athletics were at no time dangerous and in five of the nine innings they went out in order of going to bat. Score:

WE'RE BASEBALL MAD.

The people have gone baseball mad,
They think of nothing but the game;
The country's going to the bad,
It is a pity and a shame.
Just listen to this howling mob!
Has sanity been put to rout?—
Say, that was not a strike, you slob!
Somebody chase that lobster out!

Men talk baseball and dream baseball,
Forgetting what should claim their care;
From early spring till late in fall
The fans go raving everywhere.
Unless a change is brought to pass
And all this folly put aside—
Go on there, run it out, you ass!—
Slide into him, you bonehead—slide!

Why, this is Bedlam loose again!
Wherever was the like before?
As seasons come and seasons wane
The craze increases more and more!
Here is a danger worse by far
Than greed or greed or— Back!—Go back!—
Wake up! It's foul—stay where you are—
Gee, wasn't that a nasty smack!

As I was saying, men appear
To cease to think of other things;
By day and night we have to hear
Their foolish baseball drivellings—
Oh, robber—robber! — — • • • !!
—Put him out!
Boy, let me have that bottle, quick!—
He missed him by a mile, you lout!—
Oh, Lord, I wish I had a brick!

Look out! Don't strike at every ball—
Now lace it out—there! that's immense—
Whe-e-e-e-e-e-! Won't it ever stop at all?
Come home! It's gone across the fence!
Hurrah — hooroo — yip — zowie! — Wow!
Shake on that, pal; some hit, I guess!
Come on, come on—go to it now—
Say, are we happy? Nothing less.

FANS ARE MERCILESS, SAYS VETERAN HURST

Former Big League Umpire Says Followers of Baseball Forget Players' Feats of Past.

New York, April 20.—"Baseball fans are fickle, but that isn't all," said Timothy Hurst, veteran umpire, referee and sporting promoter, as he took part in a fanning bee the other day. "They have no mercy. The bugs out in Cincinnati who used to ridicule and abuse Umpire O'Day are now praising Manager O'Day without limit. But if the Reds do not keep up with the leaders just see if these same rooters don't make Hank's life miserable! That's the way it has been going on for years in the big and little cities where baseball is played.

"I speak from experience, by the way, because after I had run the gauntlet for several years as an umpire, Chris Von Der Ahe engaged me to manage the St. Louis team. This was a funny stunt, because the year previous I had been mobbed in the Mound City because I did not give all the close ones to the home team. But as the manager of the team I was a king until the season got under way. All of the nice things said about me were forgotten and I couldn't pick up a newspaper without burning my fingers. If I had been the least bit sensitive I would have been sent to some retreat, but I made up my mind to worry through it all until my contract was up. Did I kick at the umpires? Bless you no! My team was so weak that we couldn't have won three straight games if all the decisions had been in our favor.

Has Broken Hearts.

"The merciless attitude of the fans has broken more than one man's heart. I'll never forget the case of Tim O'Keefe. He was one of the greatest pitchers that ever curved a ball. It was his great work that helped the Giants to win the world's championship in 1888 and 1889. O'Keefe was like Matty—a public idol. If he had run for public office he'd have been elected. Crowds followed him home from the Polo grounds and wherever he played he was a hero. When O'Keefe couldn't pitch any more he was induced by President N. E. Young to umpire in the National league. He came to the Polo grounds in this capacity and received a rousing welcome. In a grilling battle between the Giants and the Bostons, however, O'Keefe, absolutely honest, made several close decisions against the New Yorks. Before the game ended O'Keefe was the target for a volley of abuse. He was hooted and hissed, and finally a mob tried to handle him roughly as he made his way to the dressing room.

"Believe me, boys, O'Keefe actually broke down and wept. The admirers of former days had turned against him in less than two hours. His old spirit was gone and he soon resigned from the umpire staff. The same treatment would be accorded to any of the star ball players of today if they turned to umpiring. Their achievements on the diamond would be forgotten in the wild rooting for the home team's success. Did I ever lose my nerve while umpiring? Well, not exactly. But some nights I didn't sleep well, because I was dead sore. I've taken on thirty pounds since I quit the business."

BIG SKAT TOURNEY IS PLANNED FOR CHICAGO

Chicago, April 20.—Thousands of skat players from all over the United States and Canada will compete at the Coliseum in this city on May 25, 26 and 27 in the annual tournament of the North American Skat league. Officials of the league have the plans well in hand and announce that the coming event will be the most pretentious skat tournament ever held in this country.

Ten thousand dollars will be awarded in prizes. The committee in charge is arranging to make the awards in series and report that over 500 prizes will be listed. The winner of first honors will receive $1,000. There will be several $200 and $100 awards.

President Max Wortsmann of the national league is in communication with leading skat players of Germany who have manifested much interest in the plans for the big event. Mr. Wortsmann believes that the tournament will attract a number of contestants from the Fatherland who may be visiting in this country at that time thus giving the congress an interesting flavor.

It is announced that the tournament is open to all skat players who wish to pay the entry fee of $5 and the annual dues of 50 cents in the national league. A special effort is being made to interest the beginners or novices in the national event. League officials emphasize that the newcomers will have just as much of an opportunity to win as the more experienced, the element of chance in skat being the same as in bridge whist or other forms of card games.

Prior to the opening of the first session of the tournament on Saturday evening, May 25, there will be a meeting of the North American Skat league, at which time the 1913 congress will be awarded. There is much rivalry for the event, several Eastern and Western cities having planned to send delegations in the hope of securing the award.

CHENEY MAKES THIRD TRIP TO THE MAJORS

If there be any luck in odd numbers, Lawrence Cheney, one of the nine pitching recruits now with the Cubs, believes he has a chance to make good in the majors, for this is his third opportunity.

Dame Fortune has not been overkind to him in his two previous tryouts. His first one was with the White Soxx in the spring of 1907, and he frankly says he was picked before he was ripe. His second chance was with Cincinnati in 1910, and that spring he contracted a case of typhoid fever while on the spring trip from which he did not fully recover until last season. The third time opportunity knocked at Larry's professional door was last fall, when the Cubs grabbed him from Louisville for a tryout. The old Harry who pulls the strings still had it in for him and in one of his early performances with the Cubs he broke a finger on his pitching hand against a hot liner from the bat of Fred Luderus, a heat of Brooklyn.

This did not happen before Cheney had shown Manager Chance enough to justify carrying him over for another trial this spring, and it may be that Mrs. Fate will think she did her worst last fall, so will let him alone to work out a swell reputation for himself.

Cheney belongs to the tall and rangy class just now so popular with the scouts for slab talent. He stands six feet one and one-half inches when erect, and has the proportionate weight and strength for his height. His specialty is the spitball, which he claims is a legacy from his training trip with the White Sox, but, like most spitball artists, he does not overwork the moist delivery. He has learned that the bluff spitter causes more uncertainty in the batsman's mind than would be the case if more dependence were placed on the sponge ball.

He has a fast ball that is fast and a slow one that looks fast until you hit at it, but has no curve ball to speak of. In place of the curve, Cheney uses the side arm spitball, which gets the same results. That is to say, it breaks horizontally instead of downward, as in the case of his overhand spitter.

Until he joined the White Sox in 1907, Cheney had a good curve ball, but he lost it somewhere on that training jaunt with the world's champions to the City of Mexico. He had been in professional baseball only one year when that happened, his first experience in the minors being in 1906 with the Bartlesville, Okla., team. He had not been pitching much longer than that, either.

Unlike most slab artists, Larry became a pitcher by accident instead of design. He started as a catcher for a high school in his own town of Belleville, Kan. Although not over 3,000 in population at that time, it was a pretty big place for that section of the state, and Cheney modestly admits his high school team cleaned up practically all the rival school nines thereabout. In one of the school games they had only one pitcher, and he was hurt. They had a subcatcher, so Cheney took off his mask and pad and finished the game on the slab, holding down the opponents until his team could win.

That was Cheney's pitching debut. He kept at it, and in 1906 Bartlesville sent for him. His record in that year impelled Comiskey to draft him, but in the spring Cheney found he had lost his curve ball somewhere in the cactus wastes of Mexico, and his inexperience did not tell him any way to regain it. From big Ed Walsh he got the idea of the spitball, but only a vague idea. He spent most of the 1907 trip with the second Sox team and Catcher Eddie McFarland was the man who encouraged him to master the spitball. He was sent back to Bartlesville and pitched there in 1907 and 1908 and then was picked up by Indianapolis.

During the season of 1908 Cheney gained the name of "Iron Man" by working in forty-eight games during the season in spite of a layoff for eleven out of the thirty-five weeks on account of an injury to his knee. That meant working in forty-eight games in fourteen weeks.

The Cincinnati club took him that fall, but in the spring of 1910, while at Hot Springs with the Reds, he contracted a fever, and when he recovered found himself again the property of Indianapolis. That was his worst year, and in May of 1911 the Hoosier club asked for waivers on him. Louisville claimed him at the waiver price, and whether or not Indianapolis was sorry and Louisville glad can be gained from the fact that with a hopeless tail ender behind him Cheney won nineteen and lost eleven games last season.

Cheney took part in forty-two games in 1911, pitching 282 innings altogther. In those innings 216 hits were made off him and 126 runs scored. He gave 116 bases on balls and struck out 127 batsmen, according to the official dope book. He is a hard man to steal bases against and modestly attributes his luck in the department to Walter Slagle, another Louisville pitcher, whose motion in throwing to bases he tried to learn.

TEAMS WILL HAVE MANY CANDIDATES OUT.

Both the Adams and Fitwell clubs will have candidates out tomorrow for baseball practice. The two rivals expect to have strong teams in the field the present season. Several new candidates will be out for the two teams. It is expected that the first game of the season will be played in about a week.

There are a number of games scheduled for tomorrow, most of the smaller amateur teams having some practice game scheduled.

Another State Fight.

Kansas City, Mo., April 20.—Adherents of President Taft, who claim the recent Republican primaries in Jackson county were illegal, held a convention here last night and named ninety delegates to the state convention at St. Louis to contest with the Roosevelt delegation chosen at the primaries.

OLD TIMER ENTERS RACE

Lee Frayer Will Drive Firestone-Columbus Car at Indianapolis.

Many Other Auto Drivers of National Reputation Will Compete.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 20. — One of the veterans of the first 500-mile international sweepstakes race will appear in the second annual holding of that classic event next Memorial day at the Indianapolis motor speedway, when the Firestone-Columbus "Red Wing" will again be a contender for the purse of $50,000. The car was entered by the Columbus Buggy company of Columbus Ohio. Lee Frayer, who drove it last year, will appear behind the wheel again.

Frayer's car, which finished thirteenth last year, has been overhauled and refitted with new parts. Last year Frayer rode alone in the five-century grind, but this year the rules require that mechanicians sit beside all of the drivers.

The engine will be of the long-stroke type, 5 by 5½, with four cylinders, and the piston displacement of 452 cubic inches, being far below the maximum allowed in this race, which has been established at 600 cubic inches.

Frayer's experience in the last 500-mile race taught him many things about the motor racing game, especially about the long distance events, and all winter the Firestone-Columbus engineer has been busily engaged at the factory working out some of the ideas which occurred to him during the interminable hum of the last Memorial day grind. His car finished in splendid shape last year, and with the addition of a few new parts and general overhauling Frayer writes that the machine is ready to take the track today for its long jaunt.

Lee Frayer is one of the oldest men in the automobile industry. He graduated from the Ohio State university in 1896 and immediately entered the gas engine field, designing many stationary engines, one of the best known of his products being the Columbus stationary engine.

After short experiences with motorcycles and air-cooled motors, a type of the latter being adopted by several aviators, Frayer began the production of the Fayer-Miller type of air-cooled motor and after one year of experimenting organized what was known as the Oscar Lear Automobile company and placed the first machine on the market in the fall of 1904.

Frayer's first initiation into the racing game was in 1905, when the Oscar Lear Automobile company entered a car in the six-day contest at Long Branch in August. Frayer did most of the driving in that race and during the week covered 3,202 miles, making a continuous run of 1,877 miles without a stop.

His connection with the Columbus Buggy company dates from July, 1909, when he took charge of the engineering department as chief engineer.

The other entries to this event are as follows: Two Buick cars with Gil Anderson and Len Zengle named as drivers; two Nationals with Herr, Wilcox and Merz to drive; two Mercedes to be driven by Ralph De Palma and Spencer Wishart; two Case racing cars, with Harvey Herrick and Louis Disdrow at the wheels; a Flat under the hand of Teddy Tetzlaff; one Lexington driven by Harry Knight; a Cutting with "Wild Bob" Burman, world's speed king, as pilot; a Simplox driven by Bert Dingley, and a Knox owned and driven by Ralph Mulford. With the tentative entries now offered the field is brought up to twenty-five cars, with several others ready to declare their intention of entering the lists.

WILL VISIT FACTORIES

E. J. Filiatrault Will Try to Have His 1912 Allotment Increased.

Other News of Local Auto Agents and Doings of the Week.

E. J. Filiatrault will leave some time during the week for Detroit, Mich., Fremont, Ohio, and Buffalo, N. Y., home of the three automobile factories he represents in Duluth.

It is Mr. Filiatrault's custom to visit the different factories at least twice a year that he may keep in touch with latest improvements.

At Freemont the two large thirty-passenger trucks for between West Duluth and Proctor are being made. The cars will be enclosed with glass and but one man will be needed to operate, as they will be equipped with a pay-as-you-enter arrangement.

The local man will also visit the Hudson and Chalmers factory at Detroit and the factory of the Thomas Flyer at Buffalo.

At both factories he will attempt to get more cars than his original allotment, for already his allotment for this season is about cleaned up.

The Rapid Transit Automobile company of 2110 West Michigan street reports the sale of several Abbott-Detroit cars. The company is also local agent for the Wilcox truck. Mr. Olson, who was for some years with the Russell Motor company, is now employed in the shop of this concern. E. J. Gissler is manager. The company is most progressive and already has more work than it can well handle, the garage being one of the most popular in the city.

By the burning of an automobile concern on East Superior street yesterday, several are today minus cars. The fire for a time threatened the garage of Leonard McNamara, situated next door to the burning building. There were about sixteen cars in the McNamara garage and the mechanics are to be congratulated on the dispatch with which the cars were taken out, it taking no longer than four minutes to get the entire number into the street.

The fire chief's new Kissel Kar is being equipped with a body at the Interstate garage on East First street. When this car is finally turned over to the chief, which will probably be next week, it will be about as an attractive as any car in the city. In the paint shop of the Interstate company it will be painted a bright red. The Interstate company reports a rush in the repair shop and several cars sold during the week.

H. B. Groff, a representative of the Stoddard-Dayton factory of Dayton, Ohio, is in the city trying to establish an agency here. Mr. Groff will have a Stoddard-Dayton on exhibition at the St. Louis hotel as soon as the car is received. Mr. Groff can be reached at the St. Louis.

Pointers for Motorists.

Just at this season of the year, when county road commissioners are repairing the highways with crushed stone, motorists find many stretches that look alarmingly harmful to their tires. A little care in driving over places where ruts and hollows have been filled with crushed stone will prevent injury to the tires, says the Michelin tire man.

The best way to proceed when it is found impossible to avoid a short distance of stony road is to take it at reduced speed after releasing the clutch. The distance should be estimated so that it will not be necessary to throw in the clutch in the middle of the stony part, which would necessitate a fresh start while on the stones.

In case of a long distance of stony road, when it would be impossible to "coast" over the entire distance the best thing to do is to throw in the first speed going over the stony part slowly. It may be explained that as the shocks of the road increase with the increased speed of the car, the cutting of the tires by the sharp stones will be reduced to a minimum when proceeding in the manner suggested.

Motorcycle Agency.

Walter Holmberg, one of the most popular mechanics in the city, has established on agency for the Indian motorcycle at 528 Lake avenue south.

Mr. Holmberg is thoroughly up-to-date on motors, having had years of practical experience on automobiles.

The Indian is known as one of the best makes of motorcycles, being thoroughly reliable. Many of them are in use in Duluth and are giving absolute satisfaction.

The methods of starting the Indian motorcycle have improved. No longer do you have to run alongside your motorcycle or pedal until tired to start the engine. A kick of the pedals is sufficient to start the motor, hook up the stand seat yourself comfortably in the saddle, pull in the clutch and glide away as slowly and as quietly as the most expensive automobile.

The economy of operation is one of the features that appeals to everyone. The average motorcycle will carry you over sixty miles on a gallon of gasoline.

In this city the hills were regarded as a sort of bugaboo and were thought unsurmountable. This too has been eliminated, the sturdy singles and powerful twins can climb any hill that tires can secure traction on.

The coming season promises to be an eventful one. A Duluth motorcycle club is to be formed and many enjoyable trips are being planned.

Motorcycle Notes.

Some of the motorcyclists of Newark, N. J., are talking of bidding for the annual F. A. M. meet this summer. The construction of a new motorcycle track in that city is giving impetus to the suggestion.

MINNESOTA UNIVERSITY

Annual Military Ball Was Social Event of the Week.

Agricultural College Students Planning Big County Fair in May.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—The social event of the week in university life was the annual military ball on Wednesday night. About seventy-five couples attended. The decorations and appointments carried out the patriotic aspect of the affair. The ceiling and balcony were covered with flags, emblems and floral pieces. Pitched tents and stacked arms made the floor appear like a regular camp. The crack squad executed their new maneuvers during the evening. Supper was served camp fashion in regulation tin plates. The program further carried out the delusion. Reveille was first sounded after which the morning gun was fired and the flag raised. Then followed parade and review corresponding to a grand march. After mess call the program closed with retreat, "Star Spangled Banner," lowering of the colors, and finally taps.

Cap and Gown day at the university took on a new significance Wednesday when about 200 seniors in caps and gowns were formally presented to President Vincent and the university faculty. This marks the first appearance on the campus this year of the seniors clad in their dignified garb. From now on the seniors are priviledged to wear their caps and gowns all of the time. Preceding the chapel exercises, the class marched from Folwell hall through the gate at the entrance, to the library steps where they were met by President Vincent and the deans in full academic robes. After entering chapel, where a large crowd was assembled, the president of the senior class made the presentation speech. President Vincent responded in his virile way with a talk on the history and significance of the cap and gown. He pointed out that in medieval times a cap and gown was intended to distinguish a student from his fellow citizens and to flaunt his knowledge, but that it was no longer a parade of self-satisfaction. He declared it had the distinction of any uniform, meant to submerge the individual, and symbolized comradship and loyalty to a school and to a school's ideas, and made them all into one body to co-operate together in service. He urged them to devote themselves to common service in the community. Following this a musical program was given.

Students at the Agricultural college are planning a big county fair, to be given some time in May. The event will begin with a live stock parade, headed by the village silver cornet band. This will be followed by a stock exposition and judging contest. Because many of the visitors will be unfamiliar with the campus, "Rubberneck wagons" will make scheduled trips around the grounds. There will also be a "better farming" train, composed of floats fitted out by the various departments. On the lagoon there will be such athletic events as tub racing, log rolling contests, etc. Supper will be served, following which there will be an open air vaudeville. Also the usual county fair "spike," and freak shows will be found. The county fair will give the students from the main campus an opportunity to visit the "other end" and see what is doing there and will tend to unify the two colleges. As President Vincent said, "It will make both ends meet."

On Wednesday the election of members to the board of governors of the Minnesota union was held. This was the first election under the new constitution admitting representatives from the junior classes, whereas formerly only seniors were elected. The object of the board is to carry forward the work of securing a men's building. It is hoped that temporary quarters for the union will be secured by next year. The nominations were made by the retiring board. Among those elected were: Lawrence Jacques, representative from the junior academic class; William Ecklund, for the third year medics, and Robert Ray, from the schools of mines and chemistry.

Last fall Johnny McGovern presented the Alpha Tau Omega chapter with a young coyote for a mascot. Mizzi Ato he was dubbed. He refused to be educated and culture is wasted on him. He continually breaks loose and runs around the campus causing consternation by snapping at and chasing the girls. He is really dangerous and Johnny may have a means of solving the athletic difficulty with him.

Claim of the White Oak Point Indians for Allotments.

Disagree With Governor Eberhart's Letter on the Subject.

To the Editor of The Herald:

Representative Charles A. Lindbergh has received the following letter from Governor Eberhart regarding the allotment of White Oak Point Indians within the Minnesota national forest:

"Dear sir: Following my recent telegram to you requesting postponement of action regarding the allotment of Indians of the White Oak Point band within the Minnesota national forest, I have to say further on the authority of W. T. Cox, state forester, that it is my conviction that the people of Minnesota are strongly interested in the maintenance of a real national forest in the vicinity of Cass Lake. In providing for the creation of this forest on some of the sandy pine lands near the head of the Mississippi, congress did one of the wisest and best things ever done for this state.

"It is not generally known that the area of this national forest has been greatly reduced since its establishment. If this were more widely known I am sure there would be strong objection from various sources in all parts of the state. You are, of course, familiar with these reductions in area, but I would like to make myself clear on this point. Not only was there a direct reduction, resulting from contracting the boundaries of the forest by legislation, but the presence of hundreds of Indian allotments within the reserve; the fact that there are tens of thousands of acres of state lands within the boundaries; and that there are something like 30,000 acres of overflowed land resulting from the construction of the government dams—have served further to reduce the area which it was intended should constitute the Minnesota national forest.

"There are many thousands of acres of land still available within what was formerly the Red Lake and Pembina reservations, a great deal of it dojining the present Red Lake reservation, which is much better agricultural land than that within the national forest. If the White Oak Point Indians are entitled to allotments, would it not be well to consider legislation which would give them real agricultural lands up in the Red Lake country? Trusting you will appreciate my interest in this matter and understand my motives in thus writing you, I am, very truly yours,

"ADOLPH O. EBERHART,
"Governor."

Disagree With Governor.

The governor's letter does not seem just right to us. It seems that he represents the wishes of the people, instead of respecting the rights of the people. The Indians of the White Oak Point band of the Chippewas of the Mississippi have a clear right to the lands up on the Chippewa reservation which is now known as the Minnesota National forest, because the act of Jan. 14, 1889, provides that any of the Indians residing on any of said reservations may, in his discretion, take his allotment in severalty under this act on the reservation where he lives at the time of the removal herein provided for, instead of being removed to and taking such allotment on White Earth reservation.

Section 6 of the act reads that when any of the agricultural lands on said reservation, not alloted under this act nor reserved for the future use of said Indians, have been surveyed, the secretary of the interior shall give thirty days' notice through at least one newspaper published at St. Paul and Crookston, Minn., and at the expiration of thirty days, the said agricultural lands so surveyed shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only under the provisions of the homestead law; provided, that each settler, under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead laws, shall pay to the United States for the land so taken by him the sum of $1.20 for each and every acre, in five equal annual payments. The allotments were first to be completed before any of the lands could be disposed to actual settlers as the law provides. There are thirty-seven Indians who are not yet alloted lands in severalty of the White Oak Point bands and about 200 children, more or less, born since July 21, 1900, when the alloting was closed. These ought to have allotments also. Under that law or treaty the Indians have a clear right to the lands for allotment before it could be disposed of otherwise.

Ask the Same Rights.

As to Mr. Lindbergh's bill asking for 160 acres of land for each and every one of the White Oak Point band it is based on the ground that the White Earth band received 160 acres, each man, woman and child, and of course the White Oak Point band asks for the same rights, not because they are Chippewa Indians, but because the White Oak Point band belongs to the same tribal band as the White Earth band, the Mississippi band, and they are under the same various treaties. They ceded a large tract of country under these treaties, together with the White Earth Chippewas of the Mississippi. Naturally they want their share of the lands and moneys. If the White Oak Point band belonged to some other tribal band they would not ask for the same rights though they may be Chippewas. There are Chippewas in Wisconsin, Michigan, North Dakota, Montana and other parts of the country and in Canada, but they couldn't come in and ask for the same rights any more than we could go to those places and ask to share with their lands and moneys, simply because we are Chippewas. The act of Jan. 14, 1889, providing for the sale of timber and lands on these reservations and the proceeds to be placed in the general funds of and paid to all Chippewas as in Minnesota, did not necessarily affect any of the Indian rights prior to that act nor affect any rights that may arrise since that act.

I forgot to say that if Governor Eberhart really wishes to represent the wishes of the people, he should say, let the poor Indians have their allotments and open up the balance to settlement instead of supporting the conservation idea which is a purely trust scheme. It is not conservation that made the country what it is today, but agriculture and development made it what it is today.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

Some Promises Made by the Press Agents for Coming Attractions

AT THE LYCEUM

"Bunty Pulls the Strings" will be seen at the Lyceum for five days commencing Monday, April 22, with a matinee on Wednesday. It is a Scotch comedy by a practically unknown author, Graham Moffat, a Scotchman, and was produced at the Haymarket theater, London, opening July 4, of last year, where it is still running to unprecedented business. It was brought to New York bag and baggage by the Messrs. Shubert and William A. Brady, and opened at the Comedy theater, Oct. 10, and scored a wonderful hit, in fact, New York at the present time is "Bunty" mad. So great was the New York success that a second company was sent over and opened in Chicago Christmas, and, to quote one of the western papers, Chicago is just "Eating it up." Then a third company was imported for production in the larger cities of the United States and Canada. "Bunty" suggests in its mannerism W. S. Gilbert's "Engaged," and in its general craftsmanship both the handiwork of Gilbert and J. W. Barrie.

"Bunty" is a mild satire on Scotch virtues and vices. The austere religious practices are shown, coupled with that shrewdness which profits by observation of form and violation of spirit. It depicts the stern patriarchy of a father, who has himself a past, and details with an unerring touch of remarkable delicacy lights and shadows of Scotch domesticity, frugality and searching canniness, and the small and big impulses of a narrow mountain community deeply imbued with the severe creed of Calvanism.

"Bunty," who pulls the strings, is the daughter of Tammas Biggar, and presides over his household as the successor of her mother, who died two years before.

Susie Simpson is an old maid, and a distant relative, who had loaned Tammas a matter of £150, which Tammas used to make good the deficiency of an elder son. Miss Simpson compels Tammas to choose between marriage and the restoration of her money, and Tammas is not in a position to liquidate, and in consequence passed a bad Sabbath.

Jealously of an old flame of Tammas impels the vindictive old maid to denounce Tammas in the Kirk yard, before the churchgoers, as a dishonest man, when the inventive "Bunty" promises to make good the amount and averts the theatrical arrest of her father, by confiscating the nest egg of her wedding with honest, lumbering Weelum Sprunt. The rest of the play is taken up in showing how "Bunty" set all things right, defeating Susie and marrying her father to his boyhood love, soothing the path of her dissatisfied brother and arranging her own marriage with "Weelum." The whole story is told with untheatric simplicity in terms of unforced humor, and interpreted by actors thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the author.

The Western comedy drama "In Wyoming" will come to the Lyceum tomorrow, matinee and night.

It overflows with genuine Western life, and thrills the senses of the audience with the atmosphere of Wyoming. All the characters in the play without exception are definite and convincing. Bob Ricketts is a character with a rough exterior, but is good at heart; he is coarse like his fellows, but there are many excellent traits which even his surroundings could not eradicate. The development of the man under the soft influence of pure affection, his manliness when actuated by a sense of duty and his physical courage in scenes of danger, combined with a touch of romance, make him a strong, winning character and a true son of the plains.

Jennie Summers, a young school teacher from New England, comes into his life, upsetting the hearts and ascenting the rough bearing of the cowpunchers. To Bob Ricketts she devotes herself as a teacher, eager to smooth out the creases in his grammar and willing to respect his modest manliness. He tells her that he will compel her to love him; she ridicules the idea, but after many a struggle with her conscience she finally consents to marry him.

The villain, Steve, who is also in love with Jennie, has caused much trouble. He puts in an appearance at the last moment, and kidnaps the teacher. This brings about a most exciting scene which ends in the arrest of Steve, and all ends happily.

The Kilbane-Attell championship fight pictures will be at the Lyceum theater for three days, starting with matinee Sunday, April 28. The fight itself was a sight worth traveling across the continent to see. It was the first battle in years that the champion had to draw upon every atom of his strength and skill in his effort to stop the Cleveland boy. All this is faithfully shown on the screen in better picture form than has ever been shown before.

Walter Miller, the middleweight champion wrestler, is with the show. He will wrestle two men at every performance and will forfeit $25 if he fails to throw them in fifteen minutes.

"Town Talk," a clever musical comedy with a number of chorus girls, forms part of this entertainment.

In presenting "Alma, Where Do You Live?" at the Lyceum soon, Manager Joseph M. Weber wants it understood that the English version of Paul Herve's French play is entirely different from the German one, which received so much harsh criticism when it was played at Adolph Philipp's theater on Eighty-sixth street, New York city. George V. Hobart's "Alama," the one which Mr. Weber offers, was received by the New York critics who did not hesitate to say that he had done his work very cleverly and that the farce had lost nothing in eliminating everything that was suggestive. In offering "Alma" to local play-goers, this manager promises a first class production and a competent cast, the latter being headed by Miss Nannette Flack, Charles A. Murray and Aubrey Yates, and with each of the roles consigned to a clever actor and singer.

"A clear track to fun," is the way a critic described "Excuse Me," the farcial success that Henry W. Savage will offer at the Lyceum May 3 and 4.

The piece comes direct from the Gaiety theater in New York and three months at the Studebaker in Chicago. Mr. Savage is said to have furnished a really remarkable company of farceurs for the play, Willis P. Sweatnam heading the cast. The action of the piece all takes place on the Pullman cars of an Overland limited train.

Elsie Janis, the brilliant little musical comedy star, will come to the Lyceum theater soon to present for the first time here "The Slim Princess." She is an Ohio girl by birth, up-bringing and the grace of being a taxpayer. Miss Janis was born in Columbus, educated in the Columbus public and private schools, and owns and maintains a sumptuous semi-suburban residence on North High street, opposite the grounds of the Ohio State University. In addition, she is the owner of a good tract of acreage outside the Capital City, which she is selling off in town lots with the business instinct rarely found in an actress who has only recently passed her 21st birthday.

Illuminated by the halo of success achieved through its phenomenal business done in New York and everywhere else, the laughing song play, "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," by Aaron Hoffman and Paul West, and the music and lyrics by Seymour Brown, Nat D. Ayer and John W. Bratton, comes to the Lyceum soon. The piece is said to be not only one of the greatest musical comedies of the present season, but one of the most decided novelties that Manager Marshall ever presented to his patrons of musical extravaganza. Sixty people participate in the funmaking.

"BUNTY" AND HER FRIENDS

SCENES FROM "BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS," At the Lyceum Next Week.

AT THE ORPHEUM

As the headline attraction at the Orpheum next week, beginning with tomorrow afternoon's matinee, Mlle. Simone De Beryl, a famous reigning French beauty, will present a series of poses that are said to be rarely beautiful. Mlle. De Beryl came to America for the opening of the Folies Bergere and proved one of the sensations and an attraction of the first magnitude. To undisputed beauty the French actress has added artful and beautiful accessories and her act is presented in a setting of elaborate embellishment and extraordinary electrical effects. "The most beautiful woman in Paris" is the eulogistic manner in which many of her admirers have acclaimed Mlle. Beryl and her American appearances have led many enthusiasts here to agree.

"Honor Among Thieves" is the suggestive title of the sketch which will be presented on next week's bill. The old well established idea of honor among the light fingered gentry is made the theme of a most delightful provoking little play. For "Honor Among Thieves" is comedy. It is termed a solution of the financial problem, in one act, but whether it solves the financial question or not it is said to present the pranks of three thieves and an ex-thief in a hilarious manner. The scene is laid in the apartments of two thieves. Another member of the fraternity is practicing his profession and is caught in the act. The fourth member to enter is the policeman on the beat, a former offender against the laws of society. Each one endeavors to prove to the others his incorruptible honesty, with small success. The situations are amusing and the lines are spilling over with fun. "Honor Among Thieves" was written by Frank Craven and Scott Welsh for laughing purposes.

The Four Ritchies bring with them the most remarkable collection of freak cycling machines in existence and they also bring the ability to ride them in a marvelous and brilliant skill. The comedy features of the act are said to be as clever in their way as the skill in riding.

Singing dancing and piano stunts compose the offering that Al and Fannie Steadman bring to the Orpheum patrons. The act is said to be a pleasing one in each of its three divisions.

An act made up of songs and violin music is brought by Fred Hamill and Charley Abbate in an offering called "The Singer and the Violinist." The violinist appears as a newsie who joins forces with the vocalist and beginning with a march song and ending with a lively ragtime song called "What Are You Doing With Me," which by the way is one of Mr. Hamill's own compositions, a pleasing vaudeville number is presented at a smart pace.

The Tuxedo Four provide what is said to be a delightful blend of melody and humor. The quartet is composed of an old actor, a farmer, a German and one performer in his Superior street disguise, and during the minutes they occupy the stage humor and harmony are wedded in a most happy and satisfying alliance.

The Lelands create masterpieces before the eyes of the audience. In view of the audience these clever performers paint on a transparent screen and with light cast upon the screen the picture becomes visible to the audience. The act is a clever one and the Lelands are both most efficient entertainers in this unusual but absorbingly interesting act.

The kinodrome will present a new and interesting set of moving picture films and the Orpheum concert orchestra selection will complete the bill for the week beginning tomorrow afternoon and continuing every evening with daily matinees.

Martin Beck has added Florence Roberts to the rapidly growing list of distinguished players who will appear exclusively in the vaudevile theaters controlled by him. Miss Roberts will begin a tour of the Orpheum circuit almost immediately and will be seen in a one-act play by James H. Morrison called "The Miracle." In her supporting company will be Charles Wingate, Walter Green, J. H. Morrison and Ethel Merritt. This will be Miss Roberts' initial vaudeville appearance.

• • •

"Madame Butterfly" having been successfully disposed of, Mr. David Belasco has turned his attention to "The Drums of Oude," the second of the one-act play he is to produce by arrangement with Mr. Martin Beck, exclusively for presentation on the Orpheum circuit. "The Drums of Oude" is by Austin Strong, and has to do with an incident of the Sepoy mutiny in 1857. The cast includes E. J. Radcliffe, Jack Standing, Harry Rose, John Hobson, William Phillips and Eleanore L. Estelle, and the production will be of the usual Belascoian sort.

• • •

For the prima donna role in Leo Fall's operetta "The Eternal Waltz," another of the important exclusive acquisitions of the Orpheum circuit, Martin Beck has engaged Miss Vinie Daly. Miss Daly is well known in this country both in musical comedy and vaudeville. For the past two years she has been abroad studying for grand opera.

• • •

Thomas E. Wise in "A Chip of the Old Block" will be seen on the Orpheum circuit in the near future. Mr. Wise is one of the many stellar luminaries who has recently deserted the legitimate drama for the more promising field of vaudeville. To Mr. Wise and his company fell the distinction as appearing on the opening bill of Mr. Beck's Chicago Palace theater and he scored such an emphatic success that he was immediately booked over the entire Orpheum circuit.

• • •

The Orpheum circuit's foreign department has notified the New York office that they have placed under contract Gautier's Animated Toy Shop. This has been one of the greatest novelties recently produced abroad and should prove of interest, particularly to the young folk on the Orpheum circuit.

• • •

Martin Johnson, whose travelogues have gained international repute, will tell and illustrate his experiences over the Orpheum circuit. Mr. Johnson has made a business of the wanderlust, and has penetrated the most remote corners of the globe. His most famous trip was probably with Jack London in "The Snark," when two years were spent in the South Sea Islands.

• • •

Jack Gardner is following the example of his clever wife, Miss Louise Dresser, and has gone into vaudeville. He will follow her itinerary over the Orpheum circuit.

AT THE EMPRESS

"The Wildflower," a novel comedy dramatic sketch, as presented by Beauvias, Maridor & Co., will headline the bill which comes to the Empress for the week commencing Sunday. This playlet was written by Aaron Hoffman, one of the most successful writers of vaudeville playlets in the business and "The Wildflower" is said to be his masterpiece. The playlet is a pretty one and contains all the requisites necessary for success. It is full of heart interest, interesting situations, a plausible plot and running throughout the piece is a slender thread of comedy which makes the playlet an evenly balanced one. "The Wildflower" tells of Wanda, an Indian girl. She has married an American officer in Mexico, who later left her and returned to his home in New York. Upon his return to his home, he meets and falls in love with the daughter of an aristocratic general. He courts her and is successful and is about to take her as his bride, when Wanda, who has followed him from Mexico, appears on the scene. She finally proves her love and wins him back.

The playlet is one of rare possibilities and the Beauvais, Maridor & Co. are said to make the most of them. Arthur Beauvais, who is seen as General Putnam Montague, is an actor of wide experience, having appeared in some of the best productions ever staged in this country. The role which he attempts in "The Wildflower" is said to fit him to a nicety and he is said to give an excellent portrayal of the character. The role of Lieut. Fairfax, the fickle husband, is nicely handled by William Maddern, who, in spite of the thankless role in which he appears, succeeds in winning the approval of his audience. As Wanda, the Indian girl, Miss Teresa Maridor is said to present some of the finest bits of character acting seen with any playlet this season. "The Wildflower" uses a most elaborate setting, which is said to give just the right coloring to the playlet. The following notice is from the Detroit Free Press: "The feature attraction at the Temple this week is the dramatic sketch, 'The Wildflower,' enacted by Beauvais, Maridor & Co. The playlet is made noteworthy by Teresa Maridor's characterization of Wanda, the Indian girl. Her presentation of this character is superb and would carry any playlet to success. 'The Wildflower' is easily one of the best playlets presented this season and contains that which is so often lacking in the average vaudeville playlet, a plausible plot. 'The Wildflower' was the hit of the bill last evening and it justly merited the applause accorded it."

For laughing purposes only is the offering of Mr. and Mrs. Denver. They call their act "The Elocution Bug," and it is said to be a travesty of the side-splitting order. Mr. Denver appears as a teacher of elocution with Mrs. Denver as his pupil. The pupil is "simply daffy" about the study of elocution but she has ideas of her own regarding the art, and in trying to teach her what he knows to be the proper method of elocution, the teacher becomes very much excited and then the fun commences. The idea of this attraction is different from anything yet presented at the Empress and as a laugh-getter "The Elocution Bug" is said to be second to none. Mr. and Mrs. Denver are both artists of ability and they are said to make the most of the opportunities afforded them by "The Elocution Bug." The New York World described their offering as "a roaring cyclone of eccentric comedy, the equal of which has never been seen on Broadway."

The Shaw Twins, a duo of winsome misses, will offer a combination of singing, dancing and whistling which is novel as well as entertaining. These girls have created an enviable reputation for themselves as entertainers and their act is one that is eagerly sought by the booking agents of the best vaudeville circuits in America. Both are excellent dancers and their singing is said to be very pleasing. They will offer a program of the latest song hits, interspersed with some dances. The novel part of their turn, however, is their whistling. A male whistling act is no novelty, but when presented by performers of the opposite sex it takes on novelty. The Shaw Twins are said to be excellent whistlers and their whistling is the hit of their act.

Willis & Rossman, novelty artists, are also expected to meet with the approval of Empress audiences during their coming engagement. They offer a novelty attraction which is said to be entirely different from anything yet seen in this city. To any one capable of introducing something entirely new to vaudeville, credit is due, and this is what Willis & Rossman have succeeded in doing. Their offering is said to be highly entertaining and comes to Duluth highly recommended by the public and press of other cities on the Sullivan & Considine circuit.

The extra added attraction for the week will be the Raschetta brothers, late stars of Ringling Bros.' circus, who will present a whirlwind comedy acrobatic and barrel jumping act. This attraction has for years been one of the premier acts with the largest circuses in the country and this is their first appearance in vaudeville and since their appearance on the variety stage, they have created a sensation. Their turn is of the whirlwind acrobatic order and they introduce a line of comedy, which is said to be convulsing. In addition to their comedy acrobatics, the Raschetta brothers introduce some novel feats in barrel jumping and in this line of entertainment they are said to be among the best in the business. The majority of their feats are extremely hazardous and are on the nerve-tingling order. "LUMBERJACK MINSTRELS"

Members of U. C. T. Will Present Entertainment at Lyceum.

One of the principal features of the annual show to be put on by the United Commercial Travelers at the Lyceum theater on the evening of Saturday, April 27, is one of the most hilarious comedy concoctions that has ever been seen on the Lyceum boards.

It will be of far greater interest and amusement even than the former high-class shows put on by the U. C. T. The stories, songs and comedy in general will appeal to all people of Duluth and this part of the state, because they portray the funny side of life in the back woods as seen through the keen humorous vision of the commercial traveler. Members of the cast and those who have been admitted behind the scenes at rehearsals are not telling what the exact nature of "Lumberjack Minstrels" will be, but it has leaked out that the setting, scenery and costumes will be vividly realistic of the genuine old-fashioned lumber camp life in Minnesota. Prof. Custance is directing the minstrel show and has arranged some snappy new songs and choruses especially for this production.

George O. Sullivan will be interlocutor. The end men will be "Osmundo" J. Richardson, Frank Tate, J. A. Budd and George Brink.

Some of the other performers who will take part in the show, notable Duluth favorites, are: John Smith, Scottish piper, who will accompany his daughter, Miss Smith, in a series of Scottish highland dances in costume.

Miss Brown, Miss Heymar and Miss Lawson, who have taken a great position of popularity with Duluth music lovers during the past year, will appear in vocal, violin and 'cello solos.

Duluth's famous and versatile entertainer, singer and monologist, Capt. Mahon, has a great collection of new stuff, stories and songs, all especially adapted to the occasion, which will be one of the headliners of the evening.

E. N. Haagenson, the most popular and gifted Swedish imitator in the Northwest, will give a number of rollicking new monologues. Mr. Haagenson has gained an enviable reputation with Duluth audiences.

The annual shows of the U. C. T.'s at Duluth have become a very popular yearly institution with the Duluth people. The Lyceum theater has never failed to be packed with an appreciative audience on U. C. T. night. The entire receipts of the U. C. T. shows are used in sending a delegation of Duluth boosters along with their band of music to the annual convention of the United Commercial Travelers. Members of the Duluth council of United Commercial Travelers are recognized as the most persistent and practical working boosters for Duluth and all Duluth institutions.

GOSSIP OF THE RIALTO

It is expected that this season's tour of the Friars will be more extensive than that of last year. The trip last season was so successful that the 1912 "Frolic" may be booked clear to the coast. Large cities, which are never anything less than week stands for regular attractions, were played but one night last year. Of course, the business was "capacity," and those in charge of the plans for this year's "Frolic" believe it would pay to play longer engagements in these cities.

• • •

William Morris has closed for the American rights to "The Blindness of Virtue," a three-act play written by Cosmo Hamilton. Morris will produce it on the other side next season. He has also signed Harry Lauder for another season in the states, extending his present contract with the Scotchman for next season to include 1913-1914.

"The Governor's Lady," with Emmett Corrigan, Emma Dunn and William Tooker in the leading roles, which David Belasco now has under strenuous rehearsal, will open at the Broad Street theater, Philadelphia April 29. The show will not be seen in New York this season, but will be given a thorough work-out on the road.

The present members of the production at the Winter Garden, including Al Jolson and Stella Mahew, are going on a tour next season, it is said, in a Winter Garden show. The tour will open in September. The troupe is to travel throughout the season. In the company also will be Grete Weisenthal, the German dancing girl, who will arrive in New York in time to open at the Garden tomorrow.

Tomorrow Charles Hawtrey in "Dear Old Charlie" will open at the Maxine Elliott theater, New York, supplanting "The Bird of Paradise," which left yesterday.

• • •

"The Count of Luxembourg" will not be presented in America by Klaw & Erlanger this season, but is listed to open in the fall at the New Amsterdam. Two reasons are assigned for the delay—inability to secure Lilly Elsie, who created the principal female role in London, to come to America this season, and the desire to present the attraction early and give it an all-season run.

• • •

Mrs. Langtry will tour the vaudeville circuit of Martin Beck next season for twenty weeks.

• • •

Henry B. Harris will return to New York on or about April 20 after a trip to Algiers, Morocco and Tunis.

• • •

Winthrop Ames and Lee Shubert have jointly acquired the site selected by the founders of the Ne wtheater, whereupon it was proposed to select a smaller playhouse to take the place of the first New theater on Central park west. It is on this site, which is directly back of the Hotel Astor, that Mr. Ames and Mr. Shubert will erect two theaters. One will be managed by Mr. Ames; the other by Mr. Shubert. Both will be dramatic houses and in style of architecture they will follow Maxine Elliott's theater.

• • •

Marie Tempest has just accepted a new comedy entitled "The Cuckoo's Nest," which is by Elle Norwood, one of the principals in the company now presenting "A Butterfly On the Wheel" in New York. Mr. Norwood, besides being an actor, devotes much of his time to playwriting, and has many successful pieces to his credit. A sketch which he has written in conjunction with Max Pemberton and entitled "The Gray Room" will shortly be produced here in vaudeville.

Margaret Mayo, the authoress of "Baby Mine" is in Paris to see about the production of her comedy he French. The adaptation is being re-translated into English for Miss Mayo, line for line, as a check on the natural tendency of any Parisian author to turn the entirely pure fun of this story into a naughty farce a la Francais.

Forbes-Robertson, who is playing "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" on tour at the present time, wires that his route has been so arranged that he will play the last two weeks of his season at the Manhattan opera house in New York the end of April and in Boston the first week of May. Forbes-Robertson has covered more than 25,000 miles this season, probably the longest tour ever made by an English actor-manager in this country.

• • •

The tour of Marguerite Sylva in "Gypsy Love" came to an end at the Tremont theater, Boston, last evening. Since leaving New York the attraction has been uniformly successful and there is no doubt but that she will be sent on a tour again next season. Miss Sylva's plans are somewhat indefinite. A. H. Woods holds an option on her services for another year, but Miss Sylva has expressed her first preference to be for grand opera.

BEAN PICKERS STRIKE.

Isanti, Minn., April 20.—Ten girls employed as pickers in the Sutter bean wearhouse went out on a strike Wednesday. They have been paid 3 cents per pound for the poor beans picked from the sorting machines, but claim that the quality of the beans is so good that the day's earnings may be as low as 60 cents, and that it is practically impossible for the average girl to earn $1 per day at the present rate. The girls made a demand for an increase of 50 per cent—from 3 cents to 4½ cents per pound—and when this was refused the entire force walked out.

CAMPANILE HAS BEEN REBUILT

Inauguration Will Take Place on April 25—Beautiful Loggia di Sansovino Also Restored.

Rome, April 0.—As the Venetians stood about the utter ruins of their campanile, just ten years ago, to them it seemed irrevocably lost, "gone glimmering through the dream of things that were." In those first moments the disaster appeared irremediable, but still there is their tower today, refashioned just as before, and they rub their eyes almost thinking it all a bad dream.

The campanile fell on the morning of July 14, 1902, and already in the spring of the next year work had been begun on the new structure, but not before much time had been lost and angry passions roused over the form it should take and where it should stand. One party argued that the ancients when one of their great buildings was destroyed did not erect another just like it in its place, but built the best which living architects could produce. They also said that the old tower had broken the symmetry of the piazza and that thus the site of the new structure should be elsewhere. The other party was for an absolute reproduction of the old tower and in the old place, and it won the day.

It was soon discovered that matters might have been much worse than they were; the campanile was indeed a rubbish heap, but out of that rubbish came wonderful things, bells cracked but not destroyed, pieces of marble showing the designs and shapes of what had been, old bricks bearing the names of all the emperors, from Nero to Theodosius, the angel which stood on the top was little injured, and so on.

After careful examination it was decided to use the old foundations (too small for the weight which they had been made to carry for so many hundreds of years), as they were perfect. So in 1903 the count of Turin, with Pope Pius X., then patriarch of Venice, to bless it, layed the cornerstone of the reincarnation, in the center of the original foundations. Around them were driven, over an area of twelve feet, 3,076 fresh larchwood piles, from Cadore, the piles being, more or less, 9 inches in diameter and 12½ feet long. Larch has two qualities which makes perfect piles; they harden, almost petrify, in the peculiar clay of Venice, and they are straight. They averaged 12 to every 3 square feet, making a total enlargement of 300 square yards, and were driven in by a 570-pound weight, raised 4 feet 6 inches, to absolute resistance.

However, the work presented many difficulties, as for instance, during the driving, the northwest corner showed a depression of half a foot, due to a difference of soil, so longer piles had to be selected and run through a sandy deposit into the clay below.

On this bed of piles were placed large blocks of stone cemented together, which when finished, it was estimated, would hold a weight of 90,000 tons, while the completed tower is about 20,000 tons.

This work took two years, and a year after the structure was already eighteen feet high. Work was then suspended for over a year, due to disagreements, so that the end of 1908 arrived before the shaft was finished.

All this time artists were working over the recomposition of the beautiful Loggia di Sansovino, which stood at the foot of the tower, a work of wonderful perseverance, as, for instance, the celebrated group of the Madonna with Christ and St. John, in terra cotta, was broken into 2,000 pieces, which have been patiently picked out of the debris, and, with even more patience, fitted together in such a manner that what is really patchwork appears a perfect whole; that is, the Madonna and Christ, but the St. John was so reduced to dust that not one piece was found. The four bronze figures which stood in the niches are now there as before, and the marvelous gates which were literally torn apart into fragments have been reconstructed, piece by piece, a perfect mosaic, an impossibility but for old prints which gave the designs. The marble pillars are practically the original ones, and where the missing chips and pieces could not be found the necessary material was taken from the inside of the pillars themselves. The only really new things are the doors, which are of wood, but on the old model.

The tower as it now stands (and as it was when it collapsed) is 322 feet high, the shaft, an absolute reproduction, is composed of about 1,200,000 copper-colored bricks, each hand-made over a wood fire, according to antique measurements. Each was tested before being put in place, and if not absolutely perfect was rejected. The belfry looks out over the same entrancing view, one of its peculiarities being that not a canal can be seen, and holds the recast bells and the one old one which escaped injury, the "Marangona," the largest of all, which was brought from Crete centuries ago. Over the belfry stands the original golden angel. She is thirty feet high and is made of gilded copper with the extremities in bronze. The total cost of the reconstructed tower as it now stands completed has been about $225,150, almost entirely contributed by Venice and the province of Venice.

The inauguration takes places on April 25, coinciding with the opening of the great bi-annual international exhibition of paintings and sculpture, which will take place on April 23.

It is difficult for strangers to understand what the campanile meant to Venetians, and therefore what its reappearance signifies to them. It was begun as far back in 888, and was a watch-tower to signal the arrival of the enemy, of course, from the sea. In 1329 it had already been transformed into a bell tower; in 1417 it was provided with a marble belfry, and in 1517 boasted an angel as its crown of glory, which was later destroyed and replaced by the present golden one. In all these centuries the campanile has been the protection of the city, through it no enemy could approach unexpectedly, while the peal of bells called the citizens to arms or to thanksgiving, as the case might be.

OUR HAPHAZARD WAYS OF SETTLING STRIKES

Plea to Standardize Industrial Peace Overtures—Absolute Lack of Uniformity Prevails—Must Industrial Bystanders Suffer?

By SHELBY M. HARRISON.

(Exclusive Service the Survey Press Bureau.)

Public peace is getting a new meaning. The old definition of peace, although widely accepted, is an anachronism. It dates to the time when the chief disturbances were caused by governmental policies. But a growth of commercial power until it at least rivals government strength has occurred, bringing with it potent influences for political peace. This very development, however, has brought new conditons that disrupt peace. When to settle industrial disagreement property is destroyed and people killed, war exists.

Nearly half of the states, by providing some kind of arbitration or conciliation boards, recognize that the public has some interest and responsibility in industrial disturbances. From time to time congressional committees have made preliminary investigations of industrial controversies. These, however, seem to be of more value as precedent than as a system for permanently solving difficulties. Labor troubles continue to arise. They show no signs of growing less acute and emphasize the inadequacy of our present methods for quick and just settlement.

To seek absolute lack of uniformity in public machinery for investigating controversies and for setting the issues clearly before contending parties in order to arbitrate difficulties and lead to conciliation, it was only necessary to review briefly the incidents of a number of recent strikes.

Early in 1910 between 17,000 and 20,000 coal miners in Westermoreland countq, Pa., quit work. No clear statement of issue was made public and no mediating agency was on hand to act at the beginning of the strike. Two communications from the strikers were ignored by the operators. Six months after the strike began a committee of the Pittsburg chamber of commerce asked both sides to place before "an impartial, unprejudiced committee the differences which are yours." The large operators refused. At the end of twelve months the rule committee of the house of representatives, after a hearing, decided not to make a federal investigation of the strike. After the strike had continued fifteen months the companies finally won by bringing strikebreakers into the district, and by prolonging the fight until the financial drain upon the United Mine Workers' treasury became too great. Millions of dollars were lost, yet the only way in which the state recognized the strike was by detailing constabulary to service in the strike zone.

Not quite three years ago 1,700 textile workers in Ludlow, Mass., struck because of a wage disagreement. Three days after the whole body of workers went out the secretary of the Massachusetts state board of conciliation and arbitration offered the services of the state to help bring about peace. Both the company and the workers declined the offer. Two months after the board first offered its services, it again made advances which were accepted. A satisfactory settlement was arranged, and the strikers went back to their old places. In this case and also the Westemoreland strike, the workers were unorganized before the first trouble begun.

Two years ago a strike began in the mills of the International Paper company. The employes were organized and the employers refused to meet them except as individuals. At the request of citizens of Corinth, N. Y., the commissioner of labor of New York ordered the chief of the bureau of arbitration to make an investigation of the strike. Soon after this the company requested the employes to send a man from each mill to New York for a conference with the management, and an agreemnt was reached and signed.

One year ago about 6,000 men, unorganized furniture workers, in the factories of Grand Rapids went on strike. A self constituted committee of citizens made an inquiry, hoping to bring about a settlement. This consisted of a first statement from each side, the unions and employers' organization, and a reply from each. The committee carried this investigation no further and disbanded with a few recommendations, which were not acted upon. After four months the strikers gave up the struggle in defeat.

In February, 1910, in Bethlehem, Pa., the discharge of an employe who had avoided Sunday work led to a strike. Merchants who were losing trade attempted to get the men to go back on any terms. They did not try to get to the bottom of the dispute and settle it upon some solid and just basis. Lack of funds forced the workers to resume work with none of the issues satisfactorily settled.

The cloakmakers in several hundred shops in New York city in the summer of 1910 left their work for two months. The New York state bureau of arbitration twice failed to effect a settlement. A Boston customer of the manufacturers brought about conferences out of which grew an agreement which provided for a fixed scale of minimum wages, the establishment of an arbitration board and of a joint board of sanitary control.

A review of the labor disturbances in the last decade would emphasize what is seen in the six strikes cited—namely, the absolute haphazard working of public agencies for dealing with industrial problems. There is no uniformity either of agencies or of methods. Some state boards may only make investigation. Some may publish their findings; some may not. Some may initiate their investigations and others must wait to be called into the crisis. Some have no funds and have practically no continuous existence. Most may recommend settlement measures but none have power to enforce them and many states have no such boards at all. Private agencies, moreover, have established no uniform or workable procedure either.

Those who see any seriousness at all in these industrial disturbances will be quick to see the need of dealing with them in some large scale systematic way instead of letting the present chaos of public agencies continue. The day of makeshifts has passed and an intelligent interest in the future of the country demands an impartial scrutiny of causes and tendencies.

"THE COMMON PEOPLE OF AMERICA ARE LOSING HOPE," HE SAYS AND EVOLVES A COMPLETE NEW SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT

C. J. McCord Has Interesting Plan for a Peaceful Revolution.

Would Abolish Party Government, the Senate and the Constitution.

Is Son of the Former Territorial Governor of Arizona.

C. J. McCORD.

During his spare time, out at the Esmond hotel in the West end, C. J. McCord, a son of the former territorial governor of Arizona, has evolved a complete new system of government, which he believes will solve many of the problems of the present day.

Mr. McCord's outline in itself shows his thorough knowledge of the present system of government, and if, for no other reason his proposed plan would be entitled to a serious consideration. His training and experience have also been such as to attach some importance at least to such an outline. The changes he proposes are radical, but Mr. McCord argues that radical changes are needed.

Mr. McCord is 48 years of age and has had a very interesting career. He was the oldest son of Myron H. McCord, who was a member of congress from Wisconsin during McKinley's administration. In 1897 Mr. McCord, Sr., was appointed governor of Arizona. Mr. McCord acted as secretary to his father in Washington and has also held several appointive offices, being a member of the 1900 census board at Washington. He is now in the mining, lumber and timber land business, making his home at Grand Rapids with his mother and sister, his father having died in 1908. His business brings him to Duluth frequently.

During the years he spent in Washington he was in close touch with government affairs, and made a study of them. A brief conversation with him is sufficient to show his intimate knowledge of government machinery.

People Losing Hope.

"This plan I have outlined may seem chimerical," said Mr. McCord. "It sounds presumptuous to sit down and map out a system of government, and few people will probably take it seriously, but all our agitators at present seem to be intent on tearing down, without building up. This country, many people believe, is rapidly approaching a stage where it will be ripe for revolution, and then only a spark will be needed to touch it off. The trouble is that the people are losing hope. They are like whipped beings. I have made a study of the slum districts of the big cities, and it is heart rending to see the pitiful lack of hope on the faces of even the children. If this outline of mine will start a discussion of remedies for our present social evils, I will feel well repaid. I have put a lot of time and a lot of study into it, but not with any desire for gain or fame. I would like to have people read it and consider it seriously, however."

Mr. McCord's outline covers more than fifty typewritten pages, and would make a fair sized book. The Herald has tried to condense it, without sacrificing too much of the meaning. It follows:

"The greatest curse of the Nation, today, is party government. The coalition, or joining together, of business and politics—a coalition, both the cause and result of party government—has reduced the common people to a condition of slavery and servitude to plutocracy. And this is true, because both parties that have been in control of the government, for many years, are owned body and soul by plutocracy.

"To party government may be ascribed all political, commercial and economic ills with which we now are afflicted. If this be true, and there can be no doubt of it, the remedy for such ills lies in the abolishment of party government.

"Abolish party government, and you will have divorced politics and business, and solved satisfactorily the greatest problem confronting us as a nation. And it is simplicity itself to attain this solution. All that is necessary is to devise and inaugurate a form of government in which parties have no place—a form or system which will make impossible the existence of parties. Establish a government of the people, by the people, and for the people—a government which will protect the common people against the greed and cunning of ever growing plutocracy—a plutocracy which absolutely and positively owns both the Republican and Democratic parties, the only two parties that have a chance to win an election.

Party Government.

"Party government is the greatest curse ever set upon a people—greatest because of it and through it plutocracy has its being. What satisfactory reason can be given for the existence of party government? None, none whatever; at least, none that will bear analysis and investigation. You have been told, and will be told again, that at least two parties are necessary to the scheme of government—one to serve as a check upon the other, to keep it honest and prevent unjust and pernicious legislation. (Gracefully admitting inherent dishonesty). But these, or any other, reasons are veriest rot. Parties were formed to get and to hold the offices, and to have and enjoy the perquisites and emoluments thereof—the graft money, the spoils. The piratical buccaneering of the Spanish Main was but as child's play compared to the loot harpooned by the freebooters of the Potomac and Wall Street. Those out of power wanted to get in, and so they formed parties, with all kinds of isms and promises of reform, to attract the voters to their standards. And the magnet worked, and the bait was grabbed, and the common people got off—right where they got on. However, today, the people fully realize that, no matter which party is in power, their condition steadily grows worse, and they plainly see the utter futility of looking to either party for relief.

Spirit of Unrest.

"The spirit of unrest prevading the masses, today, seems to be little understood, either by themselves or plutocracy and aristocracy, but it is surely there, and only awaits the spark to start a conflagration that will prove a veritable holocaust.

"The advocates of women's suffrage in England today assert and insist that they cannot attain their aims by peaceful methods. This may be so, and if it is, it is because of the fact that wrong conditions have obtained for so long a time that plutocracy feels itself so securely intrenched behind its bulworks of oppression that it has no fears of dislodgment. Plutocracy's day of settlement in England is not far off. Today the maddened spirit of revenge is stalking ghostlike through Londontown, and when it materializes, the bones of Robespierre will turn over in envy. And in this country, if the plutocrat does not see that peaceful methods are used by the people, a condition of anarchy will some day obtain; and then where, deluded plutocrat, will be your property, your money, your life? You will have created a Frankenstein, a monster that will prove your undoing. It is a duty to yourself, to your posterity, to your country, to your God, that you bring about conditions that, durable by the common people and necessary to your own existence. A condition that permits the rich to grow richer while the poor grow poorer, cannot much longer obtain. The insatiable lust of gold and power, imbuing the very souls of the plutocrats and politicians of today, makes them singularly oblivious to the gathering storm. It is truly hard to believe that they are so callous and hard-hearted as to have no thought or care for their less fortunate brother, but it is a fact that they have not, and this fact is borne home so strongly to the mind of the observer of conditions that he is irresistibly forced to believe it.

Opposition to Meet.

"Of course in making the fight for reform, it goes without saying much and strenuous opposition will be met with, for at the present time at least, it is not intended that the people shall rule. We will have to fight the plutocrat, the professional politician, party government advocates, the subsidized press, and especially the United States senate—that bunch of fossilized grannies, plutocrats, politicians, omnipotent—All Holy—God Heads, the anointed theocracy, the hypostatic union of the lords of lords, those hyperphysical divine perfections, those enthusiastic pagans who sit in the big Joss house on the banks of the Potomac. They have destroyed the Goddess of Liberty, and placed upon her pedestal Mammon, the god of riches, at whose shrine they bow-tow and worship with a fealty that would put to the blush a pagan idol worshipper. Still they alone are not alone to blame, for the common people have given them the power with which to crush and enslave them. But it must not be understood that all of the members of the United States senate belong to or are members of the bunch described—partly. There are a few that would gladly welcome the chance to restore to the people the rights of which they have been robbed; but the few are so hopelessly in the minority that their efforts would be unavailing and futile. But the senate appendix is not the scheme of government is, in the new plan, to be amputated. It is rotten and must go.

Votes for Women.

"The enfranchisement of women would surely bring about a clean and moral scheme of government. The graft and dishonesty now rampant would soon be things of the past, or, at least, reduced to an infinitesimal factor in the great problems awaiting solution. Government morals, now so filthily rotten in most of our large cities, would assume a much healthier tone. The advent of women into the political arena would almost at once destroy corruption at the polls. Every thinking person knows full well that it would be much safer to trust the average woman with the right of franchise than the average man. Denying women the right of franchise is the simple worship of a fetich of the barbaric ages. She has both a moral and a civil right to vote, and denying her that right is not only unconstitutional, but unjust and unfair. Also, it is a very short-sighted policy, for the endowment of women with the right of franchise would easily and rapidly bring about the reforms absolutely necessary to the existence of the common people.

Direct Primaries.

"The people, in their anxiety to better their condition, have grasped at every straw that seemed to offer relief, and the latest offered to them is the iniquitous direct primary law—that nondescript production of an immoral brain. Young as it is, it has done more to lower the moral tone of elections than all that has ever gone before, not even barring ballot box stuffing. It certainly is a delusion and a snare, and so palpably buncombe that it is difficult ao understand how any sane person can be fooled by it.

"One of the most noticeable results of the rotten primary law was the facility with which the political grafters separated the plutocrats from their money. One of the Wisconsin plutocrats, in that memorable 1905 fight, is said to have had over $300,000 'come up missin' the next mornin'.' He gracefully acknowledged, under protest, that the amount equaled $107,000. And, poor old man, he has been made, ever since, to 'come through' with more filthy lucre, in order to retain his seat in the United States senate; but, thanks to the ethical standards of morality of that body, he retains it. Also many other millionaires retain theirs. A senate of, by and for millionaires! Think of it! A fine system of government to protect the interests of the common people, isn't it?

Abolish Constitution.

"In 1789 Jefferson said: 'No society can make a perpetual constitution or even a perpetual law. The earth belongs always to the living generation.' The Constitution was adopted by the people because they thought it a necessary measure, not because they understood what it meant. Had they so understood, they never, in honesty, could have ratified it, for the simple reason that they must have known, or must be presumed to have known, that they had no moral or legal right to fetter posterity with a measure that could and should have but a temporary existence to meet conditions then existing. England, one of the greatest of nations, has no constitution. And it is because the people are too intelligent to stand for such rot. The Constitution of the United States was made in the interests of the aristocracy and plutocracy, and has ever been employed to keep the common people in subjection to their will. We see it continually invoked by the courts to aid them in their defense of the interests of plutocracy. Let us, then, do away with this monstrously iniquitous thing, and substitute organic law of our own make, but eminently equitable as between man and man—rich or poor.

"This fight, if made, must not be marked by any overt act of violence or inflammatory language or dishonest methods. The fight must be fair, honest and above board. We, the common people, constitute 90 per cent of the population of the nation. If it is right for us to rule, let us rule. If it is right for the plutocrat and his hired mercenaries to rule, let him rule; but let us, at least, find out whether or not the scales of justice can be made to balance on the side of the common weal, and against the machinations of the devil.

"It has often been pointed out that, when a scheme for the betterment of the condition of the people is proposed, the remedy, or the exact method of going to work to apply the remedy, has not been given, or outlined to an extent that will permit of intelligent comprehension, or its inauguration within a reasonable length of time. In other words, the people have not been told exactly what to do, or when to do it, or given such simple and complete details as will enable them to grasp clearly and comprehensively the full import of the plan. Magazine articles composed of high-sounding platitudes and home-made proverbs of doubtful meaning and application, and devoid of specific remedies for the cure of the ills that assail us, are not worth the cost of the paper they are written on. In this case there will be nothing left to guess at.

First Requisite.

"Elect men to the various state legislatures and to the national congress pledged to amend the constitutions of the various states and that of the United States, to the end that this scheme of government may be instituted.

Qualifications of Electors.

"Every citizen of the United States, over 21 years of age, of good moral character, regardless of sex or color, shall have the right of franchise, provided that he or she shall have passed the necessary examination to qualify himself or herself as an elector. Such examination shall be very easy and simple.

The Political Divisions.

"On the first Tuesday of April, 1916, the members of all the precinct boards in each county shall assemble in one body, and proceed to divide the county into subtowns and towns. Each subtown shall contain not less than fifty nor more than 150 qualified electors. Such number shall be as near 100 as possible.

"Ten subtowns shall constitute one town.

"Before each subsequent election every subtown containing more than 150, and every town containing more than 1,500 qualified electors, shall again be divided to conform with the plan above set forth.

"County and state lines are to be left as they are.

"The state and nation are to be divided into state and national legislative, judicial and council districts.

"No matter how many or how few electors a state or county may contain, its number of representatives in the national and state legislatures and conventions will be equal to that of any other state or county, for the number is based upon the number of qualified electors it contains. This plan makes the representation in every legislature and convention absolutely equal. No division is favored at the expense of any other. Every vote cast in any part of the nation has as much weight and effect as any other. Under the system now in use in state like Nevada, containing 20,000 electors, has as much voting force in the U. S. senate as New York state, containing 1,500,000 electors or seventy-five times as many.

The Caucus and Conventions.

The Subtown Caucus.

"The subtown caucus is composed of all the qualified electors residing within its borders.

"On the first Tuesday of September 1916, the qualified electors of each subtown shall meet and after organizing proceed at a specified hour to place in nomination the names of candidates (to be voted for in the October election to follow) for delegates and alternates to the town convention.

"But two ballots should be taken—one informal and one formal, except in the case of a tie, or when an insufficient number of nominations shall have been made. A list, alphabetically arranged and numbered of the names of the nominees shall be prepared and posted upon a blackboard and enrolled in a book, prepared and kept for that purpose.

The Election.

"On the first Tuesday of October, 1916, an election shall be held, at which qualified electors shall cast their ballots for the nominees of the subtown caucus as delegates to the town convention.

"Each elector shall vote only for the number equalling the quota of delegates the subtown shall be entitled to in the town convention, or, in other words, one-half of the candidates.

"The half of such candidates receiving the greatest number of votes shall be declared elected as delegates to the town convention and the other half shall be declared elected as alternates.

The Town Convention.

"The town convention is composed of 100 (more or less) members. It elects:

"Ten per cent of its membership as delegates to the county convention.

"A chairman of the town board.

"Town officials.

"Necessary boards and commissions.

The County Convention.

"The county convention is composed of 100 (more or less) members. It elects:

"Ten per cent of its membership as delegates to the state convention.

"A chairman of the county board.

"County officials.

"Necessary boards and commissions.

"All postmasters within the county, except those within the corporate limits of a city or village.

"Delegates to a joint legislative convention to elect a representative in the state legislature.

"Delegates to a joint convention to elect a representative in the national legislature.

"Delegates to a joint convention to elect a judge of the circuit court.

"Delegates to a joint convention to elect judges of the appellate court.

"Delegates to a joint convention to elect a justice of the state supreme court, and a member of the state council.

"In electing delegates to a joint convention, the number is to be based upon a total membership of 100 in the joint convention.

The City Convention.

"The city convention is composed of all the delegates in the county convention who reside within the corporate limits of the city.

"It elects:

"A mayor.

"City officials, or commissioners.

"A postmaster.

"Necessary boards and commissions.

The Village Convention.

"The village convention is composed of all the delegates in the county convention who reside within the corporate limits of the village.

It elects:

"A president.

"Village officials.

"A postmaster.

"Necessary boards and commissions.

The State Convention.

"The state convention is composed of 1,000 (more or less) members.

"It elects:

"Ten per cent of its membership as delegates to the national convention.

"A governor.

"State officials.

"Necessary boards and commissions.

"Delegates to a joint convention to elect a justice of the national supreme court, and a member of the national council.

The National Convention.

"The national convention is composed of 2,000 (more or less) members.

"It elects:

"A president of the nation.

"National officials.

"Necessary boards and commissions.

"Elections shall be held every six years, and no oftener, except recall elections.

"The electors of each division, national, state, county, town, etc., shall at all times have the power of recall.

"All officials appointed to office may be recalled by the appointive power, or by the proper legislature.

"All officials appointed by the president, governor, chairman, mayor, etc., shall be confirmed by a majority vote of the legislature, etc.

"All offices, boards, commissions, etc. in every division that can safely be abolished shall be so abolished. To illustrate: In many counties the offices of register of deeds and county treasurer can safely be combined to the advantage of the taxpayer and public. Also those of county clerk and clerk of the court, and those of sheriff and assessor.

The Courts.

"The judicial branch of the government shall consist of a federal, circuit, appellate and supreme court.

"The circuit court shall consist of one judge.

"The appellate court shall consist of three justices.

"The supreme court shall consist of nine justices.

"A state circuit, appellate and supreme court.

"The circuit court shall consist of one judge.

"The appellate court shall consist of three justices.

"The supreme court shall consist of nine justices.

"All courts shall sit at all times as joint courts of law and equity.

"Courts shall follow the law as written, and shall not add to, or subtract from it.

"No decision shall be based upon equity in disregard of the plain mandates of the statutes. In other words, equity must follow the law.

"No court shall declare a law unconstitutional.

"No court shall decide any law to be illegal.

"No court shall enact legislation.

"Courts shall interpret laws and decide their applicability to the case in hand.

"Court procedure, now so glaringly unjust, unfair and iniquitous, shall be revised, corrected, simplified and made equitable and just.

"The courts have usurped, to an alarming extent, the functions of their creators, and endeavored to place themselves above and beyond the reach of legislative power. It is high time the courts understood that they are not the masters, but the servants of the people. The majesty and dignity of a court is not as great as the exalted ego of a judge impels him to believe.

"Three-fourths of the jury shall decide in all jury cases.

The Legislatures.

"All measures passed by any and every legislature shall explicitly state, in language stripped of all legal verbiage, their exact intention, import, design, contemplation, purpose, application, etc. This to appear as an explanatory footnote to the act.

"A commission, the members of which shall be appointed by the legislatures of all the states, shall be created to devise ways and means to the end that the state laws of the various states shall be as uniform as local conditions make possible.

"The state legislature shall hold split-sessions, to give the electorate time and opportunity to express their opinion relative to any and every proposed act.

The Councils.

"The sole duty of the national and state councils is to pass upon legislation from the standpoints of constitutionality (if we must have constitutions), form, technical correctness, and precision of meaning. From these standpoints it may veto, by a majority vote, any measure passed by the legislature; but its veto is only of a suspensory and corrective nature, and the measure shall become a law by being again passed by a majority vote of the legislature.

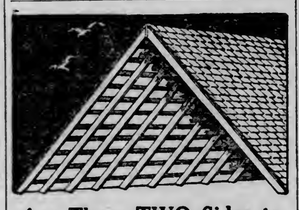
"The council may suggest but not enact legislation.

"It shall not veto a measure because, in its opinion, it is inexpedient, unjust or impolitic.

Suggestions.

"Enact a law making all elections strictly non-partisan.

"Enact a law establishing a minimum wage scale.



"Enact a law establishing a sliding wage scale, based upon the cost of living.

"Enact a law making it possible to review, on appeal, all court decisions, affecting the people as a whole, by a majority vote of the people.

"Enact a law that will permit of the occupation, without initial cost to the purchaser, of our millions of acres of vacant government land. Let the government redeem its arid and swamp lands, and place upon them the dwellers of the slums—one of the greatest menaces of social, moral, physical and intellectual upbuilding with which we are contending. This is a matter of most vital importance—the clearing of the slums. It must be done.

"Enact a law placing much greater restrictions upon immigration. Make it necessary for an immigrant to secure credentials from our consul in his country and see to it that such consul is not under the influence of the steamship trust.

Are There TWO Sides to Your Roof?

PROBABLY you have never stopped to think that your roof has an under side. The purpose of the outer side is easily understood. In fact, a roof's sole reason for existence, in the popular mind, is to keep out rain and snow.

FROM RED LAKE TO RAINY RIVER

Snowshoe Trip Across Northwestern Minnesota Described By State Forester Cox—Great Areas of as Rich Land as Can Be Found in the State.

A number of people have asked me to write an account of a recent snowshoe trip across the Red Lake country in Northwestern Minnesota. Most of these people expected to elicit a tale of hardships and a description of worthless wild country. These I cannot relate. The trip was an easy one, if mushing on Indian snowshoes can be considered easy at best; and the country traversed, far from being worthless, contains great areas of as rich land as can be found in the state. It is with the hope of dispelling some of the misconceptions regarding the region in question that I have decided to write this article.

There is a popular notion that the country for some distance east of Red lake is for the most part a sparsely timbered swamp, and that the country north of the lake is one vast muskeg too wet even for travel and utterly unfit for habitation. These notions are absolutely wrong. The object of my trip was to find out at first hand just what the forest is like and what the land is good for so that the state forest service may pursue the proper policy with reference to the whole region.

Since there is a lack of roads and trails through the territory covered, we traveled on "webs." They were of the Chippewa style and in size 14 by 48 inches. They were made by Forest Patrolman Albert Smith, who is an expert at making snowshoes and who knows the Red Lake and Rapid River countries better than any other man. Mr. Smith, his dog, Togo, and myself constituted our party. Togo, a powerful and tireless dog, on the order of a "husky," but larger, hauled a toboggan with all our provisions, blankets, a tent and a little stove. He followed along in the trail made by our snowshoes and would eat nothing but rabbits. Rabbits were everywhere plentiful and easy to shoot with a pistol or snare at night on their runways.

WILLIAM T. COX.

Rich District.

From the Minnesota & International railway to Red lake there is a rich district, rather level but well drained and most places covered with a splendid stand of hardwood, birch, elm, oak and especially poplar, very tall and of excellent quality. This is one of the very best hardwood districts of the state. There is also a good deal of white pine, tamarack and spruce. Much of the land has been logged off and settlers are rapidly clearing it up. Wherever cultivated, the heavy soil produces excellent crops and there are good local markets in the nearby logging camps and mill towns. The settlements along near the southeast and east shores of Red lake show every indication of being prosperous communities. This to appear as an explanatory footnote to the act.

"A commission, the members of which shall be appointed by the legislatures of all the states, shall be created to devise ways and means to the end that the state laws of the various states shall be as uniform as local conditions make possible.

"The state legislature shall hold split-sessions, to give the electorate time and opportunity to express their opinion relative to any and every proposed act.

The Councils.

"The sole duty of the national and state councils is to pass upon legislation from the standpoints of constitutionality (if we must have constitutions), form, technical correctness, and precision of meaning. From these standpoints it may veto, by a majority vote, any measure passed by the legislature; but its veto is only of a suspensory and corrective nature, and the measure shall become a law by being again passed by a majority vote of the legislature.

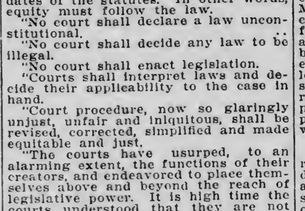
"The council may suggest but not enact legislation.

"It shall not veto a measure because, in its opinion, it is inexpedient, unjust or impolitic.

Suggestions.

"Enact a law making all elections strictly non-partisan.

"Enact a law establishing a minimum wage scale.



"Enact a law establishing a sliding wage scale, based upon the cost of living.

"Enact a law making it possible to review, on appeal, all court decisions, affecting the people as a whole, by a majority vote of the people.

"Enact a law that will permit of the occupation, without initial cost to the purchaser, of our millions of acres of vacant government land. Let the government redeem its arid and swamp lands, and place upon them the dwellers of the slums—one of the greatest menaces of social, moral, physical and intellectual upbuilding with which we are contending. This is a matter of most vital importance—the clearing of the slums. It must be done.

"Enact a law placing much greater restrictions upon immigration. Make it necessary for an immigrant to secure credentials from our consul in his country and see to it that such consul is not under the influence of the steamship trust.

Rich Land Along Rapid River.

From the Minnesota & International railway to Red lake there is a rich district, rather level but well drained and most places covered with a splendid stand of hardwood, birch, elm, oak and especially poplar, very tall and of excellent quality. This is one of the very best hardwood districts of the state. There is also a good deal of white pine, tamarack and spruce. Much of the land has been logged off and settlers are rapidly clearing it up. Wherever cultivated, the heavy soil produces excellent crops and there are good local markets in the nearby logging camps and mill towns. The settlements along near the southeast and east shores of Red lake show every indication of being prosperous communities. On account of the great variety of tree growth, there is upon nearly every claim some kind of timber that can be marketed at a profit during the winter. Poles, posts, ties, cordwood, pulpwood, stave bolts, etc., as logs are cut by the settlers and hauled out to the railroad or the lake where there is a ready market at prices which give the settler some capital for developing his land, erecting buildings and purchasing stock. Clearing, especially where the timber consists of poplar, is not at all expensive since grubbing is unnecessary. The stumps of poplar rot in two or three years so that they can be uprooted with ease. Some of the settlers have fields of 40 to 100 acres under cultivation. The haul to Kelliher on the Minnesota & International railroad is from five to twelve miles and there are several points along this shore of the lake where steamers call and produce may be shipped to Redby, the terminus of the M. R. L. & W. railroad.

Fine for Hardwood Factories.

This hardwood district east of upper and lower Red lake would be an excellent place for stave mills, box factories, spool factories, excelsior plants, etc. The supply of material is ample, cheap and of excellent quality. Manufacturing concerns like these would be of great benefit to the settlers and would bring about a more rapid development of farming and especially dairying, for which this district is admirably adapted. Within five or six miles of the lake there is an entire absence of summer and early fall frosts, due to the influence of such a large body of water. On this account there is a probability that fruit raising may become profitable here.

The peninsula between Upper and Lower Red lake, in area about seventy square miles, is composed chiefly of gravelly ridges covered with a beautiful Norway pine forest and should be made a national forest or park.

Red lake deserves to be much better known than it is. With the exception of Lake Michigan it is the largest body of fresh water wholly within the United States. It covers an area of "nearly 400 square miles."

Red lake is remarkable in that, despite its immense size, it contains no islands, and that its shore is practically a continuous sand beach. The deepest portions of the lake are only about 35 to 40 feet, but the bottom is so uniform that a sailboat or steamer can take a straight course without danger of striking reefs or sand bars. The surrounding country is even in topography and breezes on the lake are dependanble so that this splendid body of water offers perhaps the best opportunity in the world for yacht racing, ice-boat racing and similar sports.

Has Plenty of Fish.

Red lake has no muskellunge, but is well supplied with white fish, pike and other food fishes. The fishing industry has not been developed. Perhaps this is well since it will now be possible, owing to an interest in conservation, to provide for proper supervision of the fisheries when they are developed to see that favorable conditions are maintained for the reproduction of the fish and continuance of the industry. It would be much more sensible for the government to encourage a conservative development of the fisheries of Red lake and thus lead the 1,200 Indians living on its shores to become self-supporting through a line of work for which they are suited than to spend untold sums trying to make farmers of them. The fish of Red lake are worth far more to the Indians, if the government only thought so, than all the pine on the reservation and all the land which may ever be allotted to them. The present reservation includes the country on the south and west sides of the lake together with the pine covered peninsula and embraces about 400,000 acres.

At the time we were "mushing" across the broad expanse of the upper lake the snowshoe rabbit was migrating and hundreds of the little creatures were out on the crusted snow of the lake. Evidently during these migrations they are not in the habit of turning aside for lakes even if, as in this case, they could not possibly see the farther shore. The distance across was more than one night's march for rabbits and they were accordingly compelled to squat on the snow and make themselves as inconspicuous as the conditions permitted with nothing to hide behind. Owls of various kinds were abundant along the north shore of the lake and there were numerous evidences of where they had made meals of the unfortunate rabbits. No doubt that shore is an excellent hunting ground for owls and foxes, since they need only await their prey and catch it in the open. Small birds in their autumn migrations frequently perish in attempting to cross the lake in the face of cold winds and are found washed up on the shore in large numbers.

May Be Used as Reservoir.

Red lake may eventually be used as a reservoir to control the waters of Red river, and prevent the spring flooding of much good land between Grand Forks and Winnipeg. Red Lake river, through which the waters of the lake find their way to the Red river of the North, is no mean stream, having been used by steamers of considerable size freighting from Grand Forks, a distance of about 150 miles. There are rapids furnishing important water power at Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls.

The streams entering the lake are Black Duck river and Battle river at the east end, and Mud river, Bigstone creek and Sandy river on the south side of the lower lake; Tamarack, Moose, Big and Little Deer rivers, Mahnomen river and Shotley brook on the north lake. The Tamarack, Black Duck, and Sandy drain the largest areas; the other streams are short.

The Indians living on their reservation, which includes the south and west sides of the lake, are not so badly demoralized as other tribes within the state. They have come less in contact with the white man and therefore retain more of their old characteristics. They are a pretty trustworthy lot of Indians, showing some industry when given work at all suited to their nature. It is needless to say that farming does not appeal strongly to them, and I question the wisdom of the government's costly efforts to make them till the soil. Some of them, generally the squaws, do raise gardens, but the male members of the tribe prefer the lumberwoods and the log drive, some spending their summers at the fisheries on Lake of the Woods and making good wages. For this reason I want to repeat that, with proper supervision of the fisheries which could be developed on Red lake, these Indians might become self-supporting and useful citizens.

The Great Muskeg.

We now come to a particularly interesting part of our trip, namely the crossing of the so-called "Great Muskeg." After leaving the north shore of upper Red lake we went through a narrow belt of hardwood and spruce, emerging into tamarack which soon gave out and we were on what has been indicated on map after map as an expanse of open swamp. This has deterred everyone from venturing into this district. As a matter of fact a large part of the country from Red lake to the Rapid river was wet until the last four or five years but a change has taken place which is exceedingly important to Minnesota, for it has resulted in giving the state another "Red River valley." Perhaps due to the driving of the hundreds of millions of feet of timber through the outlet of Red lake and down the river, the channel has been deepened and the lake permanently lowered. This has reduced the water level in the former open swamp to the north and made of it what I now propose naming "Beltrami Prairie." This is a wonderful piece of country with a deep black soil capable of producing prodigious crops and in places ready for the plow without further drainage. With state ditches, some of which are already approved by the drainage commission, there will be less danger of flooding than in what are considered the best portions of the Red River valley. Much land on the borders of this rich district north of upper Red lake has been taken up as homesteads recently. But to my mind the best of it still remains to be homesteaded, and the man who is willing to undergo some hardships and remoteness for a year or two will be well repaid for making his home in the upper Red lake country.

We found travel easy on "Beltrami Prairie," Snowshoeing was good and a fair distance was made each day. Prairie chickens were very plentiful, both the pinnated and sharp tailed species being observed in big flocks. The tracks of foxes and coyotes wound here and there, but it was not until nearing the heads of creeks which drain to the Rapid river that we observed tracks of big game. then moose tracks were abundant and we started one which was feeding on the willows along Miller creek. The cariboo which range in this locality had gone east toward the headwaters of the Tamarack so we did not see any of them on our trip. The existence of cariboo here has been known for years but owing to the closed season and to the remoteness of their range few of them have been killed by hunters. The Indians have shot a few, but since the swamp has dried up and the mother cariboo no longer find safety during calving time on little islands which used to dot the great swamp, the wolves now get practically every calf.

Along the Rapid River.

After crossing "Beltrami Prairie" we entered the hardwood, spruce and cedar forests along the Rapid river and its tributaries. This is a district of rich soil and heavy growth. Whatever is found growing on a particular piece of land seems to be producing all it can. The trees are tall and the timber yields heavily. It would be difficult to find better stands of poplar, spruce or cedar than are to be seen here. There is also considerable ash, birch and soft maple. Down the Rapid half way to the "Forks" the settlement begins in earnest, and from there on forty miles down to Clementson, where it empties into the Rainy, settlers' cabins and clearings line the beautiful lakes. Wherever crops have been raised in these clearings the yield and quality have been wonderfully good. Wheat, oats, barley, clover, timothy and root crops yield as well as anywhere in the state and even tomatoes seem to be a sure crop, which is an indication that summer frosts are lacking. I prophesy a rapid development of this district as soon as a railroad penetrates it. There is an enormous amount of pulpwood, cedar products and hardwood material to be shipped out of the Rapid River district, and even before these are taken out the great agricultural possibilities will be recognized and actual development commenced.

Between Baudette and the Rapid river settlements there is a large area of fertile land, much of which had a heavy stand of spruce, cedar, tamarack and birch, until the fire of 1910 swept that locality. There are still patches of green timber but most of the forest was killed. Some of the land is not difficult to clear and nearly all of it is good farming land when once cleared. A good deal of it has been cut over for pulpwood and cedar. The land was practically all taken up primarily for the timber and can now be bought at very low figures by people desiring it for farms.

Along Rainy river there is a beautiful country. The soil is not quite as rich on the Rapid river but is nevertheless real good soil. Moreover the transportation facilities are already fair and much good along the Rainy. On the Canadian side there are comparatively old settlements and the farmers are well-to-do. They have not known drouths, summer frosts or other causes of crop failure in thirty years. The proximity to Lake of the Woods on the northwest, Rainy lake to the eastward and Red lake to the southwest temper the winds and keep them above the point of frost danger through the growing season. The man who watches the Rainy River country for the next ten or fifteen years is going to see a surprising development, or I am badly mistaken.

Think This Over

THE day is not so very far away when men will give more time to governing themselves than they now give to governing others.

If this joyously fine state of affairs arrives in our time, less of our products will be consumed by individuals, but more will be absorbed by the many.

Hundreds are denying themselves the strength-value of malt and hop liquid foods because they are weak in will—they are not self-governed. Healthy, normal people are never enticed beyond the borderlands of moderation. Not until men are self-controlled and fear-free will

CHILDREN WILL DANCE AT THE HIGH SCHOOL BOYS' PLAY

JOAN ROBSON.

JOHN MAGIE.

THE repetition of the amateur play, "Half Back Sandy," by boys of the Cathedral high school, which will take place at the Lyceum theater Wednesday, May 1, is a future event of interest. The boys who filled the cast in this litle play when it was presented at the cathedral auditorium early in the winter made a decided hit and displayed an ability for acting which won for them the highest praise.

The play itself is a clever little comedy full of delightfully funny situations and delicious humor, giving a bit of college life. Sandy of the title role is a farmer boy coveted by the various colleges for his football ability, and the play opens with the striving of representatives of various schools to interest him in their own institution. He finally decides upon one college and becomes a great football player, becoming the hero of the biggest game of the season. The cast has been well chosen, every one of the boys taking his part with the finish of trained actors. The cast follows:

"Sandy" Smith.....Albert Scanlon
Josiah Krop.....Michael Ahearn
Phillip Krop.....Clarus Graves
Bill Short.....George Wagner
Kenneth Sumner.....Harry Ryan
Dick Hart.....Edward Casey
"Blake" Van Twiller.....Walter Tobin
Joe Fleetwood.....George Walker
Prof. J. Booth MacReady.....
.....Archie McDonald
Prof. Dryden.....Joseph Gruesen
Mabel Sumner.....Edward Dillon
Sue.....James Patt

Students—Edward Killeen, Joseph Dillon, Vincent Fitzgerald, William Fitz, Emil Ruf, Leslie Sutton, John Sullivan, Edward White.

Other Features.

The play will be given on the afternoon and evening of May 1 and other attractive features will be added between acts which will be of general interest.

At the matinee performance several of Duluth's little dancers, who have delighted audiences before, will appear in solo dances. Little Miss Elizabeth Magie and Master Donald Wells will do a Dutch dance; Little Miss Joan Robson will appear in a classic waltz, and Master John Magie will do his Russian dance. All of these will be under the direction of Prof. Leo.

The children from the St. James' Orphanage will all be entertained at this matinee performance by kind-hearted citizens who are arranging the party for them.

ELIZABETH MAGIE.

In the evening other musical attractions will be added. Among other features Julia Donovan, formerly of this city, who is well known in musical circles, will sing.

The play is being given for the benefit of the fund which the school is raising for the equipment of a gymnasium for the Catholic Young Men's Athletic association.

Miss Pettingill was the guest of honor Wednesday evening at the weekly house-meeting at Torrance hall. The evening was spent in music and dancing.

Miss Gladys Parmalee of Torrance hall had as her guests last week-end Miss Ruth Butler of Virginia and Miss Edna Parmalee of Iron Mountain, Mich.

Miss Edna Mahnke is visiting in Hinckley, Minn.

Miss Janet Haley, president of the Thalian society, has appointed a committee consisting of Esther Minor, May Ferguson, Margaret Gudh, Isabel Driscoll and Louise Coe, chairman, to arrange for the children's party to be given next Friday night by the members of the Thalian and Greysolon literary societies. The Greysolon president, Miss Anne Elnsweiler, has appointed from that society Lida Peterson, chairman, Ines Holm, Anne McDougall and Matilda Runsvold to act with the Thalian committee. Many novel ideas have been suggested to make the party a success, and the plans include children's games, contests, songs, recitations and the like. The guests will wear children's costumes.

Miss Sophie Holman of Ironwood, Mich., did not leave school on account of ill health, as was first reported.

Miss Madeline James of Two Harbors visited Miss Matilda Runsvold at Torrance hall on Friday and Saturday of last week.

Miss Petronella Stenberg has secured a position in the sixth and seventh grades of one of the Cohasset schools. This school is under the superintendence of Mr. Freeman, who visited the normal school last week.

Miss Edith Canfield of Torrance hall spent last Saturday and Sunday with friends in this city.

The junior and senior girls in the kindergarten training department took part last evening in an exhibition of folk dancing given by Miss Stoughton at the high school. The funds raised by this exhibition will be used to send a delegate to the national convention of kindergarten teachers in June.

Miss Gladys Parmalee left last evening to visit her sister in Virginia.

Miss Ruth Ericson has been substituting this week in the kindergarten of the Franklin school.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The plans and rules governing the Wallace cup contest, which will take place in Superior May 3, were read to about fifty students interested in oratory and declamatory contests at a meeting in Professor Brackett's room yesterday afternoon. Professor Brackett has selected April 26 as the date for the inter-class contest, which will be held following the regular school session.

Only regularly enrolled students having passing credit in all their studies will be allowed to participate in the Wallace cup contest.

The tryout for this contest will take place Monday, following the inter-class meet and will continue during the week, the finals for the championship of the school being held Friday.

The remaining Zenith slips will be placed on sale Monday and Tuesday as announced by Principal Young in chapel yesterday morning. After the publication is put out it will be impossible to secure one of the annuals until all the outstanding certificates have been redeemed.

A very important meeting of the Zenith board, which was twice postponed, was held Friday afternoon. The prize stories were read and discussed and winner of the first prize for the original short story will be announced Monday.

Frank Higgins was in the school yesterday. Frank was one of the most popular members of the class of 1911, and paid a visit to the school renewing many old acquaintances.

The boys of the school were given the opportunity of hearing the illustrated talks on the various colleges and universities which have been featured weekly under the auspices of the Associated College Alumnae. "The University of Wisconsin" was the subject of one of these popular lectures given Monday afternoon in the physical laboratory by Miss Grace Wright of the faculty. Miss Wright gave a very interesting talk on the campus and various buildings of the university, and also explained the extent of equipment of the different departments. The lecture conveyed a general impression of the work and routine at the renowned institution, and was greatly enjoyed by all the boys present.

There was no meeting of the Junto Literary society this week. The regular business session of the club will be held next Thursday in conjunction with a short program.

The senior essays were due Monday and many of the students had to work overtime in getting the papers in as scheduled.

May 6 has been set by Prof. De Witt L. Sprague as the date for the second draft of essays.

The girls' Bible classes met for the regular weekly study yesterday afternoon at the Young Women's Christian association.

At a meeting of the Central basket ball team yesterday afternoon, Arthur Osman, the star center, was elected to head the quint for the season of 1912-13. Osman played the center position on the first 1911 Central team and early this year, after Capt. Jerominus was pronounced ineligible by the faculty he was chosen to captain the team. Only two "D" men besides Capt. Osman will be available next year, as three of the members of the team will graduate in June. Elder and Harris are the two players who will return next year and with Osman should form the nucleus of one of the fastest teams ever developed at Central. The "D" men who were given a vote in the election were: Osman, St. Clair, Harris, Stillman, Elder and Currie.

Bowling as a sport has never taken much of a hold on the students of the school, but at present this popular pastime is rapidly growing in favor with the boys. During the past week a high school tournament was held at the Y. M. C. A. alleys under the auspices of the association. Singles, doubles, and 5-man teams were entered in the event and the affair occasioned a considerable amount of friendly rivalry, incidentally showing that Central high can boost of a few crack bowlers.

Owing to a lack of uncompleted business the regular monthly meeting of the junior class which was scheduled for Wednesday afternoon was indefinitely postponed.

During the chapel services Monday morning Principal Young thanked all the participants in the "Trial by Jury" performance, which was produced under the director of Mr. A. F. M. Constance, for the benefit of the Athletic association. Mr. Young also extended his congratulations to the principals and chorus on the success of the production.

The track squad has been out practicing daily under the direction of Capt. Matt Brown. The athletes have been taking long jaunts of a couple of miles every night and are rapidly rounding into condition for several dual meets for which the local representatives have already opened negotiations.

"The Law As a Profession" was the subject of a vocational address to the members of the High school boys' Bible classes by Elmer Blu, a well known local attorney. The talk was given in place of the regular classes at the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. Tuesday evening.

PROTECT YOUR FURS

From Moths, Fire and Burglars!

Our Cold Dry Air Storage Vault provides the highest form of protection for Furs and Fabrics.

The immeasurable advantages our cold storage system has over the old fashioned methods can be readily understood, for paper or mere cold air repositories do not render absolute proof against ruinous insects. Such protection is guaranteed only when the temperature is positively frigid, as in our vaults.

Furs naturally will retain their own brilliancy and color when kept in an arctic atmosphere, the same as that in which they thrive in nativity. This fact is continually demonstrated by us. Furs which have become dull, lusterless and dry through exposure to warm temperature during the summer have been revived and restored by remaining for a time in these cold, dry draughts.

Under our modern system, the furs are thoroughly cleaned before they are placed in storage. They are suspended separately in the vaults, entirely removed from dust, and exposed to constantly circulating dry air at a temperature of twenty degrees below freezing. The air is cooled in our own refrigerating plant and is driven through the vaults by powerful electric fans.

We have special arrangements to accommodate fine draperies, curtains, rare brocades, tapestries and other hangings. They are afforded exactly the same protection as the furs, being suspended and freely exposed to the cold air currents.

A cordial invitation is extended the public to visit our Cold Dry Air Storage Vaults.

REMEMBER—We guarantee absolute protection against Fire, Moth and Burglary. Be sure to store before the moth gets in its work.

Dainty little folk dances were charmingly given and every group received applause.

The Lester Park kindergarten children opened the program with two little dances, "Hickory, Dickory Dock" and "Danish Dance of Greeting" under the direction of Miss Clare Shaver and made a very pretty beginning. Miss Nesbit and Miss Roberts conducted the children from the Emerson kindergarten in a group of charming little songs while the Webster kindergarten children under the direction of Mrs. Boer gave a lively Indian war dance wearing feather head dresses.

Miss Mabel Culkin and Miss Leopold presented the Washington kindergarten children in a winter game and soldier game which was enjoyable. The little tots all wore white with red ribbons and ties.

Children from the Madison kindergarten drilled by Miss Florence Bradley gave a group of charming little Gaynor songs pleasingly and one of the prettiest numbers on the program was the apple blossom song, recitation and dance by the Franklin kindergarten children under the direction of Miss Ethel Erickson and Miss Buchannan. Attired all in white with little pink caps and garlands of apple blossoms they made a pretty picture.

Children of Miss Nellie Stoughton's primary grade were perfectly drilled in a group of three dances which they gave with a precision and apparent joy which was highly praised.

The Irish lilt was given by Miss Clare Shaver and Miss Lelia Sparks under the direction of Miss Stoughton and a group of girls from the normal training class gave a dainty group of "village green" dances. Miss Florence Williams gave a piano solo and after the performance Miss Maude Matteson

Two Duluth Girls Win Recognition in Washington

VIOLET JORDON.

TWO Duluth girls who are studying music in Washington this year have been receiving recognition for their work there. Miss Nora Harrison and Miss Violet Jordon, both former pupils of Mrs. E. Frank Barker of this city, who are now studying with her former master, John Porter Lawrence in Washington, were two of the three pupils whom he presented in a recital a short time ago and for which they received warm praise. A musical critic writing of Miss Jordon, said, "she played as if she were inspired."

After this recital, Senora de la Culva, wife of the first secretary of the Mexican embassy entertained at a musical tea at which both Miss Jordon and Miss Harrison were asked to play and of this the Washington Post writes:

"Senora de la Culva, wife of the first secretary of the Mexican embassy, entertained at a musicale tea Thursday afternoon from 3 to 6 o'clock at High Lands * * * Miss Nora Harrison of Duluth, Minn., delighted all present with her fine interpretations of Schumann piano solos and Brahm's Rhapsody No. 2, which were well received, as well as were the piano numbers played by Miss Violet Jordon of Duluth. Among others Miss Jordon played Listz's Rhapsody No. 8 beautifully."

Miss Harrison and her mother, who is with her in Washington, will return to Duluth soon.

NORA HARRISON.

Will Sing for Charity on First Appearance After Return From Abroad

MISS ALICE SJOSELIUS.

MISS ALICE SJOSELIUS will appear in concert here at the First M. E. church on Friday evening, May 3. This will be her first public appearance since her return from Europe, where she has been studying music for two years and Duluth music lovers and her circle of admirers, in particular, will be delighted to have this opportunity of hearing her, for they have been anticipating this pleasure ever since her return. She has not felt able to work since her severe illness last winter in Germany and has put off her singing until she felt stronger. "This month at home," she said, "has done me so much good. I believe it must be the wonderful atmosphere. Anyway I feel very well and quite able to work again. I shall be very glad to give this concert.

"My program is not quite completed yet, but I shall sing a group of Swedish folk songs among other things," she explained in answer to a request for her program.

This concert is being planned by women of the First M. E. church for the benefit of the deaconess home of this city and other features will also be added to the program.

Theosophical Lecture.

THE fourth public lecture under the auspices of the Karma and Reincarnation league was delivered Friday night at the Duluth lodge room, 28 Winthrop block. The speaker took up the subject of cosmic evolution stating that a knowledge of the organization and purpose of the Universe was necessary for a thorough understanding of human evolution, its method and destiny. A clear and simple explanation of the Theosophical teachings on this subject was given. Touching upon the subject of Reincarnation as regards its necessity for the growth of the soul, he said in part:

"There are but three explanations of human inequalities, whether of faculties, opportunities or circumstances; special creation, heredity and reincarnation. The theory of special creation is rejected by all thoughtful people. The list of injustices brought about by such a theory is almost infinite for it includes all inequalities. It has made myriads of atheists. It is incredible to the intellect and revolting to the conscience. The hypothesis of science is not as blasphemous as that of special creation, but heredity only explains bodies; it throws no light on the evolution of intelligence and conscience. The Darwinian theory tried to include these but failed lamentably to explain how the social virtues could be evolved in the struggle for existence. Science does not tell us how to build strong minds and pure hearts for the future. She does not threaten us with an arbitrary will but she leaves us without an explanation of human inequalities. She tells us that the drunkard bequeaths to his children bodies prone to disease but she does not explain why some unhappy children should be born into such diseased bodies. The theory of reincarnation restores justice to God and power to man. Every human soul enters into human life a germ, without knowledge, conscience or discrimination. By experience, pleasant and painful, man gathers the materials and builds them into mental and moral faculties. Pain follows in mistakes and is ever remedial; strength is developed by struggle; we reap, after every sowing, the inevitable result; happiness growing out of the right and sorrow out of the wrong. And so in every case the individual past explains the individual present and when the laws of growth are known and obeyed man can build with a sure hand his future destiny, shaping his growth on lines of ever increasing beauty until he reaches the stature of the perfect man."

Following the lecture the speaker answered questions, explaining among other things, the reasons why people do not remember their past lives during the earth part of the present life.

The lectures are public and free and will be continued for several weeks on Friday evenings at 8 o'clock.

A rummage sale is being planned by the board of directors of the Children's home, to be held about the middle of May. This sale has been found necessary to help meet the expense of renewing insurance premiums which have to be paid in May.

NEWS OF THE WEST END

DR. HOVDE HEADS NEW SOCIETY

Norwegians Interested in Raising $1,000,000 for Native Land.

Every local Norwegian organization was represented last evening at a meeting held at the office of Dr. Hans Hovde, 220 New Jersey building, for the purpose of forming a permanent organization to raise Duluth's part of a $1,000,000 endowment fund. This fund is to be given to the Norwegian people during the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the independence of Norway in May, 1914.

DR. H. HOVDE,
President of the Norwegian Endowment Organization of Duluth.

About fifty representatives of the different organizations were present at the meeting and the following officers were elected for the year: Dr. H. Hovde, president; A. J. Moe, first vice president, representing the West end district; A. P. Bjorge, second vice president, representing the East end district; A. L. Apland, third vice president, representing the West Duluth district; A. Bjorge, treasurer, and L. A. Simonson, secretary.

Norwegians of the United States plan to raise $1,000,000 by May 17, 1914, when the amount will be forwarded to the old country to be used in assisting the poor throughout that nation. The principal will not be touched, but the income is to be used as the working capital. Committees are to be appointed and a general campaign started throughout the city for subscriptions.

L. A. SIMONSON,
Secretary of the New Organization.

The following societies and organizations were present at the meeting last evening: Varde club, Lysglimt lodge, No. 7, I. O. G. T., Sons of Norway, Normanna Singing society, the Zion Norwegian Lutheran church and the First Norwegian-Danish M. E. church.

PROTEST AGAINST NEW PATROL LIMITS

The North Star Lodge No. 11, I. O. G. T., has filed the following resolution with the city clerk, protesting against the extension of the patrol limits in the West end.

"Whereas, it has come to our notice that the Common Council of the City of Duluth, notwithstanding the earnest protest of the two aldermen of the Seventh ward, besides a whole host of business men, citizens and residents of the Seventh ward, has extended the patrol limits from Twenty-third avenue west to 200 feet west of Twenty-fourth avenue west, in said city, which action has been construed by many citizens to mean that another saloon will be located on or near Twenty-fourth avenue west.

"Now, therefore, Be it resolved by the members of the North Star Lodge No. 11, I. O. G. T., that we hereby enter an earnest protest against the said action of the said council, and hereby appeal to the same body to cause a repeal of the said ordinance.

"We further enter our emphatic protest against the granting of any saloon license for any saloon to be located within the boundaries of the newly extended patrol limits, as above stated.

"Signed—Gust Hjerpe, H. Sutterlund, Gust Landin, committee; C. G. Carlson, C. F.; and Fred Edlund, secretary."

BASEBALL SQUAD WILL BEGIN WORK.

Members of the Adams Athletic association will hold their first baseball practice at Athletic park Sunday afternoon. A large number of the members are interested in the sport and John Geistman, who will be in charge of the nine this year, expects about thirty members to appear in uniform for the first practice.

The Adams nine has made an enviable record in baseball during the past three years and a championship team is the prediction of the members of the association for this year. The team ran second last year in the Duluth-Superior league, of which it is a member.

Will Teach in Nebraska.

Miss Evodia Olson, daughter of Rev. C. G. Olson, 2305 West Third street, has been appointed instructor in the Swedish parochial schools at Wausau, Neb., for the summer season. Miss Olson received notice to that effect yesterday afternoon and will leave for Wausau within a few days. Wausau was the former home of Rev. Mr. Olson, who was in charge of a Swedish church there before coming to Duluth.

PROPOSED NEW HOME FOR SWEDISH SOCIETIES

Nearly $10,000 has already been raised in the campaign for $100,000 for the erection of a new Scandinavian fraternity house, or social center, in the West end. The campaign for subscriptions from every Swedish resident of the city started about five weeks ago. The members of the Vasa order, No. 170, Swedish United Sons of America, are conducting the campaign and arranging for the new building.

The following committee appointed by the Casa order at its last meeting, is in charge of the subscription campaign: F. A. Carlson, chairman; C. F. Hoffman, vice chairman; August Hammar, secretary; A. T. Lind, treasurer; Andrew Nelson, legal advisor; John Brandt, A. J. Eklund, C. F. Forsell, Otto Gafvert and George W. Olson. The committee will have complete charge of the construction work and will also handle the rentals of the building.

The plans for the structure have been completed by Bray & Nystrom, architects, and the building will be on the general plan of the Y. M. C. A. of Duluth. The basement will be arranged for a gymnasium, including a pool and billiard room, bowling alley and shower baths. The first floor will include a large auditorium, offices, free reading rooms and a corner drug store. A third floor is also planned and will include lodge rooms, dining rooms and a large kitchen in the rear.

The building will be used by all the Swedish societies and organizations in the city, and is to be known as the Swedish social center of Duluth. A nominal fee will be charged for the use of the gymnasium. At present it is planned to charge $2 a year for this privilege, while out-of-town residents will only be charged $1. The reading rooms are to be open to the public free of charge. The various lodgerooms are to be rented out to the different Swedish societies of Duluth, and the large auditorium will be used for Swedish concerts, lectures or theatricals.

The exact site for the building has not been determined as yet, but the members of the executive committee have been approached with several desirable locations. The building will be erected west of Twenty-first avenue west and south of Third street. It is proposed to erect the structure on a corner lot. The plans call for a frontage of fifty feet and a depth of 140 feet.

According to the present plans of the executive committee, the entire amount is expected to be secured before the summer of 1913. Should the money be subscribed before that time, the building will be erected as soon as possible, so that the annual midsummer's day celebration may be housed in the new building a year from next summer. The plan is meeting with favor, and communications from other cities asking about the local situation show that the work of the local Vasa Order is becoming known in every Swedish settlement throughout the country.

FORTY WEST END BUSINESS MEN REORGANIZE WEST END CLUB

Forty representative West end business and professional men reorganized the West End Commercial club last evening at George M. Jensen's office, 2117 West First street.

The following officers were elected during the evening: Fred G. Hanson, manager of the National Candy company, president; August B. Width, vice president; William L. Anderson, secretary; Sanford W. Hill, treasurer, and Charles Benson, A. B. Anderson, E. Bjorlin, Joseph W. Cumming and Dr. O. A. Oredson, directors.

P. E. Dowling, president of the Greater Duluth club, gave a short address, in which he explained the purpose of the new club. He predicted a number of industries for the West end and the passing of the 100,000 population mark within the next two years. He urged a hearty co-operation among the West end club members and the other Duluth clubs.

The members condemned the action of the city council in extending the patrol limits in this end of the city. The various speakers claimed that there are enough saloons in this vicinity, and a resolution to this effect will be sent to the council some time next week. The meetings of the new club are to be held every Friday evening at Sloan's hall, Twentieth avenue west and Superior street. The next meeting will be held April 26.

WILLIAM L. ANDERSON,
Secretary of New Club.

REPAIRING ST. PAUL'S CHURCH BUILDING.

Workmen have torn down the old addition to St. Paul's Lutheran church, Twentieth avenue west and Third street. Extensive repairs are to be made to the structure within the next month, after which the building will be repainted.

The building itself will be moved nearer the sidewalk sometime next week and in the rear of the basement a newly equipped kitchen will be installed. The remainder of the ground floor will be given over to the furnace and fuel room and various Sunday school rooms and parlors. The main auditorium will be redecorated and plastered.

The repairs to the building were decided on at a recent meeting of the congregation, when $3,000 was voted for improvements and additions. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and now I have my health.

MEN'S DISEASES

The more medical science advances, the more apparent becomes the folly of employing harsh and dangerous measures in attempting to cure the ailments of men. Drastic dosing and useless cutting have done irreparable injury in thousands of cases. We cure all special diseases of men promptly and permanently by painless methods that cannot possibly produce undesirable results.

OUR TREATMENT

Functional derangement is not a disease. To stimulate activity by the use of powerful tonics is an easy matter, but such results are merely temporary drug effects. Most doctors treat in this manner because they do not know how to cure the real cause of the derangement. We have in our service the most powerful X-Ray and High-Potential-frequency machines which cost us $10,000; with these machines we will build up your brokendown system quicker than gallons of medicines and a surgeon's knife could do. Our treatment is local and constitutional, and corrects every abnormal condition of that vital center. Our cures are real cures and are permanent.

Twenty years of successful practice as specialists in Men's Diseases justifies every claim we make. We promise our patients a complete cure in every instance, and in cases where we cannot safely make this promise, we positively refuse to treat. All cures are guaranteed.

DEPENDABLE TREATMENT.

Our treatment is absolutely painless, and perfect results can be depended upon in every instance. We do no cutting, burning or dilating like is usually done in strictures, piles and worm like veins.

Not one of our patients has ever had a relapse after being discharged as cured.

VARICOSE VEINS.

Absolutely painless treatment that cures completely. Investigate our method. It is the only thoroughly scientific treatment for this disease being employed. Instead of cutting the worm-like masses, we dissolve them and remove the cause forever.

BLOOD POISON.

No dangerous minerals to drive the virus to the interior, but harmless blood cleansing remedies that remove the last poisonous taint and clean out and clear up the system. "606" is given after the system is thoroughly cleansed of the poisons that circulate in the blood. No cure is perfect, no matter if a patient had ten injections of "606."

STOMACH TROUBLES

have the least attention from patient and doctor. Last week a man came in our office who thought he had a little Dyspepsia, and it proved to be a cancer. Come in, we will cure you.

Hours: 9 to 8. Sundays, 10 to 1.

Is This Man Gifted With Strange Power?

Prominent People Say He Reads Their Lives as an Open Book.

Do You Want to Know About Your Business, Marriage, Changes, Occupation, Friends, Enemies or What to Do to Achieve Success?

TEST READINGS FREE TO ALL DULUTH, MINN., HERALD READERS WHO WRITE AT ONCE.

Attention of the mystically inclined seems to be centered at present upon the work of Mr. Clay Burton Vance, who, although laying claim to no special gift or supernatural powers, attempts to reveal the lives of people through the slender clue of birth-dates. The undeniable accuracy of his delineations lends one to surmise that heretofore palmists, prophets, astrologers and seers of divers beliefs have failed to apply the true principles of the science of divination.

It is not to be denied that astrologers have excited the interest of enlightened people of all ages, but there have been many earnest thinkers reluctant to accept the theories of the ancient Chaldean science. One can only judge the potency of the science of Astrology by a personal application of its principles. To have all the cardinal events of your life spread out before you; to read an undeviating description of your true character, habits and inclinations, is proof positive that the mighty power that shaped the universe and set the hands on the dial of time to mark the destiny of man, has not left us without the means through which we may know ourselves, through which we may fathom the mysteries of life. Asked to explain the method by which he gives his delineations, Mr. Vance replied: "I have simply resurrected an ancient science and moulded it into a key to human nature."

The following letters are published as evidence of Mr. Vance's ability. Mr. Lafayette Redditt writes: "My Reading received. With the greatest amazement I read, as step by step you outlined my life since infancy. I have been somewhat interested along these lines for years, but had no idea that such priceless advice could be given. I must admit that you are indeed a very remarkable man, and am glad you use your great gift to benefit your clients."

Mr. Fred Walton writes: "I did not expect such a splendid outline of my life. The scientific value of your Readings cannot be fully appreciated until one has his own Reading. To consult you means success and happiness."

Arrangements have been made to give free test Readings to all readers of The Duluth Herald, but it is especially requested that those who wish to avail themselves of this generous offer make application at once. If you wish a delineation of your own life, if you wish a true description of your characteristics, talents and opportunities, simply send your full name, the date, month and year of your birth, and also state whether Mr., Mrs. or Miss. Send your letter to Mr. Clay Burton Vance, suite 542-E, No. 14 Rue de Richelieu, Paris, France. If you wish you may inclose 10 cents (stamps of your own country) to pay postage, clerical work, etc. Please note that 5 cents postage is required on letters posted to France. Do not inclose coins or silver in your letter.

Rival Candidates at North Dakota Insurgent Meeting Nearly Mix It.

George Young of Valley City Calls Ex-Governor White Liar.

Fargo, N. D., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—"It's a lie," shouted George M. Young of Valley City at the insurgent meeting here when ex-Governor White of the same town questioned Young's insurgentism and made the assertion Young had once attempted to turn over the Barnes county delegation to Alex McKenzie for the purpose of securing a place on the McKenzie ticket.

Mr. White told Young he would settle with him outside and then apologized to the rest of the insurgents for saying anything that tended to cause a disturbance.

Excitement was caused when the insurgents permitted Bessen and White to explain their candidacies for congress in the Second district where Young is also a candidate.

He came from West Duluth about fifteen years ago. Illness is supposed to have caused the act. An aged father and two brothers survive.

Mr. Wickstrom had taken the rifle and loaded it during the temporary absence of his brothers, and drove a bent nail into the ramrod for the purpose of pulling the trigger of the gun. He then sat down near the house and, putting the muzzle of the rifle to a spot under his chin, sent the bullet crashing through his skull. SAYS MRS. BUTTON WAS VERY JEALOUS

Husband of Grand Forks Suicide Claims Woman Had Threatened Life Before.

Grand Forks, N. D., April 20.—Special to The Herald.)—J. A. Button, husband of Anna Button, who committed suicide in this city Wednesday evening, attributes her action to jealousy. He declares that she was very jealous of his first wife, from whom he was divorced, and who is now a resident of Crookston, where his three children also live.

To a little country home four miles from Detroit, Minn., the body of the suicide woman was removed yesterday. Though she had been wedded twice, she was only 25 years old. Not long ago a brother met death by accident, and shortly before his death, the father, after eighteen years' illness, succumbed, leaving his wife, to whom the body of the suicide daughter was brought yesterday.

Mrs. Button was a graduate of the Moorhead normal school in 1908, and afterwards she was engaged in teaching for several years.

Why He Missed Train.

Mr. Button states that he went to Crookston Wednesday morning and missed his train in the evening because he stopped to purchase a Shetland pony for his eldest son at Crookston.

Five or six times, he said, she had threatened to end her life. Once about four months ago, while in a fit of anger, she had secured a revolver, firing a bullet but not striking herself. He did not believe that she tried on that occasion to kill herself, but that she had merely fired the bullet to frighten him.

He has been in jail here since the fight and Mrs. Davis has been working in town at such employment as she could find.

Davis was formerly a brakeman at Niles, Mich. He worked at West Allis and Tomahawk last year.

CHARTER PREVENTS PLAN.

Scheme for Driveway Around Lake Bemidji Cannot Be Realized.

Bemidji, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—The plans of the Commercial club to construct a driveway around Lake Bemidji and to save for public recreation a great, pine tree forest on the eastern shore of the lake, by means of the creation of a park board are blocked by the present city charter of Bemidji, according to a ruling made by City Attorney P. J. Russell, for the city council. Attorney A. A. Andrews addressed the council as a representative of the Commercial club and explained that it was the desire of the club to have the council call a special election at this time for the purpose of establishing a park board, but following Mr. Russell's interpretation of the Bemidji charter the idea was abandoned by other means of constructing the road and establishing the park are being discussed.

WOUNDED INDIAN RUNS.

Fearing Arrest, He Disappeard When Doctor Arrived.

Sandstone, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—Tom Hill, an Indian, was found beside the road about a mile from the saloon at Parkville, in the worst part of the country, Monday night. He was terribly beaten up and had been cut with a knife. It was thought he would die and the coroner was telephoned for, and Hill was taken to the saloon, where he stayed until Dr. McEachern arrived. While the doctor was taking care of his horses, some one must have frightened the Indian by telling him that he would be arrested, for he fled to the woods before the doctor reached the saloon. As near as can be learned, Hill and Fred St. John had a quarrel on the road and a fight resulted. The whereabouts of St. John are not known by the authorities.

ATTORNEY GENERAL IS ASKED ANOTHER POSER.

Grand Forks, N. D., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—Another poser for Attorney General Andrew Miller, bearing on the assessment registration law, has been presented by an inquisitive North Dakotan who wants to know if a man has to swear to his party affiliation in order to participate in the non partisan judiciary primary election.

This question is but one of the several that have arisen in connection with the registration law, which is giving assessors no little trouble in some quarters, although most of the voters are educated to the system and respond readily to the enrollment official's request for information.

THOUGHT IT WAS CANCER

Rodent Ulcers and Many Other Skin Troubles Mistaken for Cancer.

Electro Medical Doctors Overrun With That Class of Diseases.

Thirty-four thousand persons died of cancer last year in the United States, and the authorities are waking up to the fact that the public should be more instructed so as to avoid this class of disease, for in every case of cancer there is a time when the growth can be stopped.

When the Electro Medical Doctors announced that they have been successful in the treatment of cancer in the case of Mrs. Mary Smith of Lakewood they had but little idea of the many patients afflicted with this disease in this healthy climate of the Northwest. There has hardly been a day when the Doctors have not had a cancer patient come in their office. Yesterday, a man with a terrible looking face stepped into the office of the Doctors who wanted to be cured of a cancer. He had seen several doctors who declared his case to be one of cancer which could not be operated, and there was nothing to do for him but to console himself with death staring in his face. When the examining physician of the Doctors looked at him, he pronounced his case to be "Lupus," which belongs to a class where a cure is possible by the right application of Electro Medical treatments.

The doctor said that many a patient had entered the office who was afflicted with a sore which was diagnosed to be cancer. "Twenty years ago," he said, "a woman came to my office and said: 'I have a vicious looking sore on my face, it has been there for over two years, and I want you to cure it.' "How do you know I can?" the doctor said. "I know you have cured others," was the reply. "One doctor said it was cancer and wanted to cut it out while one said that it was too late to operate on." After the Doctor examined it he found it not to be cancer, but a well developed Epithelioma, a festering growth which he readily cured with several applications of a simple remedy applied to the growth with electricity. Electro Medical Methods are very simple but they are most powerfully effective in all chronic diseases. They have cured patients who have suffered for years. Diseases of all descriptions yield easily to this method of natural healing and those who sincerely desire to be cured should apply to the doctors at No. 20 West Superior street. All consultations are free and every sick man or woman will be welcomed.

HEAD OF LAKES DUE TO BOOM

ARE YOU IN A CONDITION TO MAKE THE MOST OF PROSPEROUS TIMES?

Possibly Your Brain Is Befogged From the Effects of Strong Drink.

The Neal Institute Cures the Drink Habit in 3 Days and Restores Mind and Body.

Someone has said that opportunity knocks at every man's door at least once, and it is up to each one of us to accept and make the most of the chance offered.

It stands to reason that the man, whose brain is dulled from the effects of liquor is not in a condition to cope with the keen, active, up-to-the-minute business man of today. The man addicted to the liquor habit has proved himself a speculation—and unsafe business venture. Statistics show that about 99 per cent of all failures have been due to drink.

However, there is no good reason now, why all excessive drinkers should not be saved from a habit worse than folly, for the Neal Institute, corner Belknap and West Seventh street, Superior, Wis., transforms the worst drinker into an absolute teetotaler in just three days. This treatment will in three brief days take away from the excessive drinker, no matter how many years he has been drinking, all craving or appetite for drink, and leave him in the same normal condition—so far as Liquor is concerned—as he was in before taking his first drink.

The Neal Treatment, strictly ethical and administered by regular licensed physicians, consists of a perfectly harmless, vegetable remedy taken internally, and there are absolutely no hypodermic injections and no strong or deleterious drugs used, and consequently there are no bad after effects.

Call or phone for a copy of our contract and free booklet explaining the Neal Treatment. Mailed in plain sealed envelope and everything strictly confidential.

BUTTE WAGE QUESTION LIKELY TO BE SETTLED

Good Strike on 2,600-Foot Level of North Butte Mine.

Butte & Superior May Erect Zinc Smelter to Treat Concentrates.

Butte, Mont., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—In the next few weeks it is believed that the wage question between the miners and the mining companies will be settled, as it is stated that John D. Ryan, president of the Amalgamated company, will be here in the course of a short time and will take up the question with a committee of the miners' union. Just what the demand of the union will be has not leaked out, but it is understood that it will be a rate of $4 a day for all persons working underground. The companies, it is stated, are not adverse to paying the $4 a day to the miners, but it is claimed that there is decided objection to consenting to that rate to the muckers. The Socialist element insist that $4 be paid all around, but the conservative members of the union are said to be perfectly satisfied to deal with the mine owners on a reasonable basis, and it is considered quite certain that a satisfactory agreement will be reached which will result in the amicable arrangements which have prevailed in the past five years being continued in the future. A member of the committee of the miners' union on the wage question stated a few days ago that there was no question an agreement satisfactory to all concerned would be reached before the first of the month.

Tuolumne.

The Tuolumne company management proposes to ascertain the quantity and quality of ore on the 1,800-fot level before starting to lower the shaft to a depth of 2,000 feet. At the present time the 1,800-foot level is proving very rich and the grade of ore is considerably higher than on the 1,600, which is averaging about 7 per cent. It is not the intention of the company to increase the production for at least several weeks, and in the mean time it is hoped to bring about an agreement with the Anaconda company for the treatment of the large amount of second class ore which is available for shipment. If this agreement is reached the company expects to be in a position to increase the shipments to some where between 500 and 600 tons a day. At the present time about 150 tons of first class ore are being shipped to the Washoe smelter.

North Butte.

The report that a body of ore running about 4 per cent copper has been opened on the 2,600-foot level of the North Butte mine is undoubtedly true, although the management in this city will not confirm the same. It is said to be the Edith May vein, and those who claim to be well acquainted with conditions are satisfied that as the drifting proceeds a rich body of ore will be encountered. On the 2,800-foot level there appears to be no doubt that the Edith May vein was cut, but the ore was not over 4 per cent and this was decidedly disappointing. Just after this vein was cut, the work was abandoned owing to the very bad condition of the air and work was commenced under a contract with the Anaconda company, cutting through from the High Ore in order to provide the ventilation necessary for the men to work. This will take at least four weeks yet and in the meantime the development work will be entirely devoted to levels above. On the 2,200-foot level of the Snowball vein alone there is enough ore to keep shipments going equal to the production of 2,500,000 pounds of copper a month for a long time. Besides development work is going on in several of the upper levels, and the North Butte today has more ore in reserve than at any time in its history. This month the production will be fully 2,500,000 pounds.

Butte Central.

The Ophir mine of the Butte Central Copper company for several weeks has not been shipping any ore, but a few days ago a carload was sent to the Washoe smelter which ran between $25 and $35 to the ton. It is intended to continue the shipments of first class ore at the rate of 50 tons a week. On the 500-foot level a fine body of copper ore has been encountered which is fully eight feet wide and runs between 2½ and 3 per cent. hen it was first encountered it was thought that a rich body of copper glance had been struck, but the rock was found to contain a good percentage of lead and zinc and the balance in copper. A contract for the erection of a concentrator at the Ophir mine has just been made with the Colorado Iron Works company of Denver and another contract has been signed with the Westinghouse company for the electrical equipment.

Butte Alex Scott.

The Butte Alex Scott has again increased its production, this time from 150 tons a day to 200 tons, and this is the capacity of the hoisting equipment. On the lower levels some fine bodies of copper are being opened up, and it is only a question of a short time when the directors will be compelled to install a new surface equipment.

Butte-Ballaklava.

The Butte-Ballaklava company has struck a body of ore on the 1,600-foot level which runs about 7 per cent copper. A shipment was made to the East Butte smelter a few days ago, and the intentions are to keep up shipments of a carload a week for the present. A raise is now being run from the 1,400-foot level to the 1,300 for the purpose of furnishing air and it is expected to encounter a body of ore. It is believed that within the next few weeks sufficient ore will be blocked out to enable shipments being made every day. Just when the suit by the Anaconda company against the Butte-Ballaklava company will be brought to trial is yet uncertain. The question of the transfer of the case to the federal court has been argued and the Anaconda company did not offer any serious objection, the counsel appearing for the company intimating that it made little difference where the case was tried. Every once in a while a report is put in circulation that negotiations are pending for a settlement, but from reliable sources it is learned that there is no possibility of any agreement being reached so far as the Anaconda company is concerned. If the Butte-Ballaklava company desires to settle the dispute as to the right to mine in certain ground, it must renounce all right and title to the ground it has been working and which it is prohibited from operating by injunction.

Pilot Butte.

The negotiations between the Pilot Butte and the Butte & Superior company, for the treatment of the large body of zinc ore opened up on the 900-foot level of the former, are off. Soon after the ore was encountered and it was found to run 20 per cent zinc with good values in silver and gold, an effort was made to have the ore treated at the new Butte & Superior concentrator which is expected to be in operation in May. There is about twelve feet of zinc ore and it was felt by the Pilot management that such action would result in providing the treasury with considerable money. Since then a considerable block of the stock has been purchased by Eastern interests and it has been decided to let the zinc ore remain in the mine and go ahead with development work in the hope of encountering the copper ore. With that end in view work has been commenced sinking the shaft and this work will be continued until the shaft is down to a depth of 1,500 or 1,800 feet, the belief being that by the time the latter depth is reached rich copper bodies will be encountered.

Zinc Smelter Probable.

A zinc smelter is among the possibilities and the company likely to undertake the construction will be the Butte & Superior. Some time ago Capt. A. B. Wolvin, president of the Butte & Superior, with D. C. Jackling, the big Utah mining man, and several experts, made a thorough examination of the process for treating zinc concentrates invented by F. F. Peterson, a Butte man and graduate of the state school of mines. The demonstration was such a satisfactory one that Capt. Wolvin, after consulting with the directors of the Butte & Superior company, decided to erect a small plant for experimental purposes and it will be ready for operation in the course of the next two weeks. The heat in the furnace is to be supplied by electricity and Peterson is positive that he will be in a position to show a saving of 95 per cent in the zinc ore and about the same percentage in copper and gold. If the new process should be a success, it will undoubtedly prove a great saving, as at the present time it is costing the Butte & Superior company $40 a ton to have its concentrates treated at the Oklahoma smelter. It is asserted that the cost for treating the concentrates under the Peterson process will be between $13 and $15 a ton. If it is demonstrated beyond a doubt that the Peterson process is all that is claimed, the company will make arrangements for the erection of a smelter at once to have a capacity of 500 tons of concentrates a day.

Elm Orlu.

W. A. Clark has not made any move as yet in the way of preparation for the erection of the concentrator for the treatment of the zinc ore from his Elm Orlu mine. Several weeks ago he announced while in this city that he would build the concentrator and that he would make his plans known in a few weeks. Since that time a large body of copper ore has been opened up in the Elm Orlu and he is having it mined and sent to the Washoe smelter for treatment. Miners say that there is more copper than zinc ore being uncovered in the Elm Orlu, and the belief prevails that in view of this condition he has given up for a time at least the idea of erecting a plant for the treatment of zinc ore.

Leonard to Resume.

The Leonard mine, which has been closed down for the past three months to equip the engine for operation by compressed air, will be ready to resume operations in about another week.

TO OPEN UP GREAT MINING TERRITORY

Montana-States Mining Corporation Organized By Leading Montanans.

Helena, Mont., April 20.—For the purpose of developing about 700 acres of mining ground six miles east of Alhambra, the Montana-States Mining corporation has been organized with a capital stock of $5,000,000, divided into shares of the par value of $5 each. The organization is principally due to the efforts of Robert A. Bell of Helena, who has been chosen general manager. The other officers are Justice Henry C. Smith of the supreme court, president; Dr. Rudolph Horsky, vice president; Edward Horsky, secretary-treasurer. The main office of the company is in Helena.

Associated with those who have incorporated the company is C. E. Heidel, who became identified with mining interests in Butte in 1904 in the organization of the Black Rock Mining company, which two years later was reorganized as the Butte & Superior Copper Mining company, which is now operating what is, without question, destined soon to become the most important zinc producing company in the world. By his friends, Mr. Heidel is termed the father of the largest mine in the Butte camp. He has been interested in the promotion of mines in California, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon and Montana, but he pins his faith to Montana, and as a result of the development work planned by the Montana-States Mining corporation he predicts that one of the largest mines in the West will be opened up.

The property consists of thirty-eight claims traversed by forty-one veins with a strike east and west. On the B. & G. claim a shaft has been sunk to a depth of 250 feet and from one ore body $29,711.78 worth of ore was shipped some years ago. A body of ore was opened up 250 feet long and three feet wide, averaging about $30 to the ton.

It is proposed to drive a main tunnel a distance of nearly 5,000 feet in a southerly direction through the mountain to intersect all of the forty-one leads, and the first one will be reached at a distance of slightly more than 300 feet. This tunnel will give a depth of from 200 to 1,082 feet. It is estimated that there are undeveloped ore bodies in the company's ground to the extent of 43,704,450 tons, both smelting and concentrating.

IRON TRADE STABILIZED

Important Effect of Steel Corporation Stated By Thomas F. Cole.

Newport's Shipments Likely to Exceed Million Tons This Year.

As the dispatches from Washington have indicated, Thomas F. Cole of Duluth proved to be one of the most interesting witnesses who have appeared before the house committee that has been investigating the Steel trust. No man who could have been summoned has a better right than Mr. Cole to speak authoritatively in regard to the iron ore industry of the Lake Superior region, or of the relations of the United States Steel corporation to it. His identification with mining in this region long antedated the formation of the corporation and until his resignation two or three years ago he was president of the Steel trust's Oliver Iron Mining company. At present he has no official connection with the corporation.

The testimony of Mr. Cole was of interest on two points, in particular, one concerning the surrender of the Hill ore lands lease and the other his estimate of the economic benefits in the iron fields resulting from the organization of the trust. On the one point, he said that the value and the possible production of the Hill ore lands have been greatly overstated, which facts he intimated were largely responsible for the surrender of the lease. This reason for the notice of cancellation heretofore had been surmised. To one sitting in Mr. Cole's testimony, however, the entire Lake Superior region, particularly the Michigan ranges, is ready to bear witness. It was his statement relating to the beneficial effect that the organization of the trust had in stabilizing the iron ore industry.

It was a saying in this region, before the advent of the Steel corporation, that with iron it was "a feast or a famine." Wide fluctuations in price were characteristic of the ore market in those days. Earnings one year were excessive, and another they would fall to the point of disappearance. General business underwent the same excessive fluctuations as the ore industry, and it was impossible to make any intelligent forecasts for the future on the basis of the present. In the decade since the Steel corporation was organized there has been an entire absence of the wild fluctuations that formerly were taken as a matter of course and accepted as an evil that could not be obviated. It has been a decade of orderly progress throughout the whole iron producing region of the Lake Superior country. Ore prices have been wonderfully stable, and that has made for stability of wages and number of men employed. This, in turn, has meant the stability of general business. Possibly there may have been certain disadvantages for the iron ranges in the advent of the Steel corporation but they appear to have been more than offset by the benefits that have been reaped.

Newport's Big Output.

The unexpected announcement that the Newport Mining company has made heavy sales of ore, and that its shipments this year probably would exceed 1,000,000 tons, has been cheerily received in the Ironwood district of the Gogebic range, where the big Newport mine is located. While it is not stated at what prices the contracts have been placed, the fact that the company mines about the best ores produced in the Lake Superior region is taken as an indication that these prices approximately will be the top for the season. The Newport is employing less than 1,000 men, a number well under the normal force, and for the time being at least there will be no material increase in the pay roll. The stockpiles are of such proportions and the mine is so extensively opened ahead that the shipment of 1,000,000 tons with the present force will not be difficult. The orders booked give assurance that for still another season the Newport will be the biggest individual shipper on the old ranges. It is the biggest underground mine in the Lake Superior iron region and the possessor of a wonderful deposit. The Schlesinger interests of Milwaukee, the owners, have finance holdings also, and, as is customary, a good-sized proportion of the year's outgo of ore will go to affiliated iron-producing plants.

In the shipment of ore from the hill lands, the Steel corporation is expected to make a big record at the western end of the Mesaba range this season. While the Hill mine itself has been inactive since last fall, stripping operations in the Canisteo district have been continued ceaselessly, night and day, and literally acres of ore are ready for the shovels. Butler Bros., who have the contract both for stripping and mining at M. A. Hanna & Co.'s silver property at Virginia, have resumed work for the season. For the present two shovels are in commission. Various other open-cut operations have been taken up all along the range, and ore is beginning to go forward in material volume. The Mesabs is, in fact, looking forward to one of the busiest seasons in its history. This is the expectation, also, on the twin ranges to the northeast, the Vermilion. It is not believed the Vermilion production will equal that of boom years, but it is indicated that in exploratory and development work the range is on the brink of unusual activity. Excellent advices are coming from the Consolidated Vermilion, Lucky Boy, Fargo and Section Thirty Development properties.

Iron River Production.

It is the expectation in the Iron River district of the Menominee that that field will send out approximately 2,000,000 tons this season—much the largest outgo in its history. More companies are engaged in this field than in any other of the Lake Superior region. Among these, all operating within a radius of six or eight miles, are the following: Oliver Iron Mining company, Pickands-Mather company, Corrigan-McKinney & company, Oglebay, Norton & Co., Cleveland Cliffs Iron company, New York State Steel company, Rogers-Brown Iron company, Youngs Iron Mining company, Wickwire Steel company, Jones-Laughlin company, Bates Iron company, Republic Iron & Steel company, Niagara Iron Mining company and Penwabic Mining company. Besides these there are the following local companies: Iron County Steel company, Wisconsin Ore company, McGreevy Mining company, Iron River Ore company and Blair & Gibbs Exploring company. There are still thousands of acres of mineral lands, which will require many years of active drilling to determine whether they contain any ore of merchantable quality.

Another cave-in of serious moment only to the railroad companies has taken place at Oglebay, Norton & Co.'s Bristol mine in the Crystal Falls district of the Menominee. It affects a slice of ground 200 by 100 feet along the north side of the old open pit, as well as the railroad tracks serving both the Bristol and the Hanna company's Ravenna property. A cave-in a year ago carried down the area adjacent to the south side of the pit and shut off from the mine the Chicago & Northwestern railroad. A new track, serving both the Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul company was built to the north of the pit. It is this track that has now been destroyed. Until a new line is laid still further to the north, the Bristol will have no railroad facilities. This work would, in any event, have been necessary along towards the fall, with the big newt shaft in commission, but for the time being the shipment from the large stockpile and the present shaft must be given outlet.

DIVIDENDS BY MINES IN MARCH

Figures of Straight Metal Mining Are Distinctly Encouraging.

The dividends of the American mining, metallurgical and coal companies paid during March, 1912, as compiled by the Engineering & Mining Journal, amounted to $17,388,642, as contrasted with the $29,844,356 for March, 1911. This tremendous falling off is not real, being due to $14,500,000 being shown last year as the Standard Oil disbursement for March, to which we have nothing this year to correspond.

On the side of straight metal mining in the United States, the figures are distinctly encouraging, this year's figures being $4,983,399, against last year's $4,878,308, while Canada and Mexico this year pay $1,354,100, as against last year's $603,808.

Calumet & Hecla increased its dividend from $6 to $8 per share, a return of about 6.75 per cent on the present price of the stock. Champion declared two $1 dividends in March, a total of $4 per share in the first three months of the year. Quincy also paid, but simply at its usual rate of $1 quarterly.

In Utah, Opohongo paid its second dividend. Utah Copper continued at the rate of 75 cents quarterly, disappointing those who had been prophesying for an increase.

Federal Lead was forced to cut its preferred dividend to 1½ per cent quarterly, while Yukon Gold continues paying at the reduced rate instituted in December.

Greene-Consolidated, after an absence of four years from the list, "came back" with a payment of $600,000. Cananea Central also paid $300,000, so that Greene-Cananea, the holding corporation, was able to return $618,828 to its stockholders, the remainder going largely to cover previous administration expenses. New York & Honduras Rosario also paid in this month after a year of silence.

The Temiskaming Mining company paid its first dividend since the purchase of the North Dome mine, which it is now considering selling.

AT THE GIROUX CONSOLIDATED

Should Be Able to Produce 1,000 Tons Daily By May 1.

Ely, Nev., April 20.—The work of preparing the sulphide mines of the Giroux company for shipping is progressing rapidly, and from present indications everything will be in readiness for outputting 1,000 tons of ore per day, commencing May 1, and continuing without intermission from that time indefinitely. The old workings between the Bunker Hill and Morris shafts have been cleared for more than one-half the distance, and as drifts are reached from the main level, miners are put to work developing new ore bodies for stoping.

New men are being put to work almost every day. Some work is necessary to construct a concrete pocket and retaining wall at the Morris shaft, but this it is expected will be completed in ample time to commence shipping ore by May 1. The force of miners formerly employed at the Alpha property has been transferred to the Bunker Hill and Morris workings on the sulphide zone.

The pumps at the Giroux shaft are in operation, and are lowering the water at the average rate of three inches per day, which is an indication of the tremendous body of water encountered below the 1,200-foot level. At present about 1,000,000 gallons of water per day is raised to the surface. This, however, is regarded in a most favorable light by the management of the company as it is a guarantee of an ample supply of water for milling purposes whenever the company decides to erect its own plant.

It is understood that the Giroux company has a very satisfactory contract with the Steptoe smelter for the reduction and smelting of its ore, and at the present price of copper it ought to be able to clear at least $50,000 a month when it gets into full swing and is shipping its minimum amount of ore.

STRIKE AT ARCADIAN

Encounters a Four-Foot Shoot of Rich Copper Ground.

The Adventure Is Opening Ground of Exceptional Richness.

Houghton, Mich., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—The New Arcadian Copper company, operating in the presumed horizon of the Baltic lode, has encountered copper ground of some promise in Diamond Drill Hole No. 23. The strike was made at a depth of 1,075 feet and consists of a four-foot shoot of rich copper ground occurring in an amygdaloid lode thirty or more feet in thickness. The lode carries more or less mineral throughout with the better showing in the foot wall portion in which the drill was still working at last reports. This discovery is distinct from that made on section 9 in the extreme northern limits of the property where Hole No. 22 recently developed an epidotal amygdaloid of exceptional richness in the horizon of the Isle Royale-Portage lode.

Adventure.

The Adventure is opening copper ground of exceptional richness in an unidentified amygdaloid lode, fifteen feet wide, encountered in the cross-cut driving east on the 1,525-foot level, No. 5 shaft. The new lode lies approximately 635 feet from the shaft at this point, and was not revealed by the drill borings that resulted in the discoverure of the so-called Adventure lodes, Nos. 2 and 3, unless possibly, it is identical with No. 3 lode, which, according to calculations previously worked out by the management, is given a position nearer 900 feet from the shaft at this depth. Whatever its identity the lode is one of unusual promise so far as may be observed in the rather limited openings made. Lodes Nos. 1 and 2 where opened on this level gave small encouragement and are not receiving further attention. The cross-cut will be extended several hundred feet further and at about 840 feet from the shaft should intersect lode designated as No. 3.

Indiana.

The Indiana is developing a heavy showing of copper mineral in the felsite bed opened by cross-cut and drifts on the 600-foot level of the No. 1 shaft. A small amount of copper, finely disseminated, was disclosed in cutting the station on this level and has shown wonderful improvement under development. A cross-cut has attained a length of about fifty-five feet, and at last reports was breasted in heavy copper. The shaft is sinking steadily at the rate of about seventy feet per month and is now down well 750 feet. The copper bearing felsite disclosed by the famous No. 2 drill hole will be reached by the shaft at a depth of between 1,200 and 1,300 feet, as nearly as can be calculated.

Old Colony and Mayflower.

The Old Colony and the Mayflower companies have each received a second drill outfit to facilitate work in the exploratory campaign now in progress. The Old Colony company is making two borings within a few hundred feet of the drill hole that in the adjoining property developed the so-called Mayflower lode. These holes have attained depths of 350 and 150 feet, respectively, with developments expected at about 1,200 feet. The Mayflower company on its acreage is making a further investigation of the Mayflower lode in which it has already developed copper ground at three points. The new holes designated as 18 and 19 are down 870 feet and 100 feet, respectively. The No. 18 hole should tap this formation at about 1,300 feet.

Keweenaw.

The Keweenaw has decided to dispose of its standing timber valued at between $300,000 and $400,000. The timber will be sold in whole or in part with the proviso that it be sawed and converted into lumber at some point on the company's railroad, the idea being to provide the road with a new and much needed source of revenue. Failing to dispose of the timber on such terms, the company will build its own saw mill and do its own cutting. The sale of its timber lands is expected to supply sufficient working capital to begin exploratory work, planned in the horizon of the Mayflower lode.

Wolverine.

The Wolverine is developing a fair showing of copper ground in the Osceola lode. The single shaft sunk on this formation has attained a depth of about 400 feet, and at several points opened a fair showing of copper which, however, failed to hold under development. The present showing on the third level is an improvement over anything disclosed in the past and appears to possess some degree of permanency. Exploratory work elsewhere is centered in the territory lying east of the Kearsarge horizon. This area is being explored by a cross-cut on the twenty-eighth level between shafts 3 and 4. This cross-cut has attained a length of about 1,500 feet and will reach the boundary line in another 1,500 feet. It is expected to intersect an unidentified amygdaloid lode, opened in previous work on the Old Colony tract next south in which a showing of some promise obtained when work was suspended some years ago.

EXPLORATION IN BRIGGS SHAFT

Extent of Great Ore Body Not Been Determined Yet.

Bisbee, Ariz., April 20.—Exploration work still continues in the Briggs shaft of the Calumet & Arizona, but as yet the extent of the great ore body that was encountered in this shaft has not been determined. A cut 250 feet in length has been run through this ore body in one direction and cross-cutting in another direction is now in progress, and has progressed 75 feet, while the work in raising from the same level has reached 40 feet. All of these cross-cuts are in ore, so that the extent of this splendid deposit still requires considerable exploration before it can be determined. So far as explored, the ore body will average 10 per cent or better in coppers. These values are adjacent to the extremely rich strike reported several weeks ago, where daily assays ran from 30 to 40 per cent. That rich deposit is next to the foot wall, and the cross-cutting has led away from it, so that the full extent of extremely rich ore remains, as yet, undetermined. Thus far there has been no stoping in this ore body, the work being confined to drifting for exploration purposes, which has been found productive of splendid immediate profits in production, as well as pleasing discoveries as to continuous extent and values.

At the Irish Mag shaft work of exploration is being continued on the 1,500-foot level under the big ore body. Heretofore no work had been done upon that deposit at lower than the 1,200 to 1,400-foot levels, and the present work is being done to develop extent in depth. It has now been found that the ore body extends clear down almost to the sill of the fifteenth level.

Present activities at the smelter site have never been equalled in the history of the company, and it is doubtful if elsewhere in Arizona may be found a parallel. The old smelter is operated at full capacity, that great earning capacity which has enriched the stockholders, and provided a surplus fund more than enough to create a new and greater plant, and by its side is growing the splendid new structure that will not only work great economies in production cost but increase the capacity by 50 per cent.

WORK STOPPED AT CALUMET & SONORA

Believed There Is Deal Pending for Sale of Property.

Cananea, Mex., April 20. — The Calumet & Sonora Mining company has practically ceased all its mining operations at its property two miles northwest of Cananea, and no actual mining work is being done at present. However, the mills are being operated on the ore which has been previously broken and it is almost certain that the property will be closed down on the first of May, according to rumors afloat at the present time.

No reason is given for the partial shutdown by the management but it is believed that there is a deal pending at present for the sale of the property, and that announcement to this effect will be made in the near future There are no more men being worked at present than is absolutely necessary.

That there has been some dissension in the ranks of the stockholders of the company, has been known for some time, and it is reported that if the deal pending at present fails to be carried out that a reorganization of the company will follow.

The report of Dr. Walter Harvey Weed on the property has been made public recently and it is considered pretty favorable. The report shows that the mine contains 6,000 tons of broken ore, ready for the mill, and 147,000 tons of probable ore above the 525-foot level of that is high grade enough to mill, and 122,800 tons of low grade ore that may prove valuable with higher metal prices and reduced costs. Dr. Weed recommends the installation of electrical driven machinery throughout. It will cost $100,000 to bring the plant up to a standard where the property will pay with an increase in the mine output of 300 tons daily.

GOOD TIME FOR EDITORS

Minnesota Scribes Will Be Given Warm Welcome in Duluth.

Will Be Entertained With Boat, Train and Automobile Trips.

Plans for the first "Seeing Minnesota First" trip of the state editors were made this noon by a committee at the Commercial club.

The members of the Minnesota Editorial association will leave St. Paul Friday morning, July 19, and will arrive in Duluth at 2 o'clock that afternoon. The delegates will be met here by the Northern editors and the party will leave for a short trip to the north shore and Isle Royale, returning Saturday evening. On Sunday the delegates will be taken to the surrounding farms by automobiles.

Following the automobile trip to the outlying farms, the members will leave Sunday evening for a three days' trip on the Mesaba and Vermilion ranges, returning to Duluth Wednesday evening, when the Commercial club will entertain the delegates at a banquet. Thursday morning a trip will be taken up the St. Louis river to the steel plant, with a pike dinner served at Fond du Lac.

Thursday evening a dance will be given at the boat club, which will close the formal program for the convention. On Friday the members will visit with their friends and spend the day as they please. The delegates will leave for St. Paul Friday evening.

Frank Meyst of the Kellog Paper company of Minneapolis and C. C. Whitney, editor of the News-Messenger of Marshall, Minn., were in the city today to attend the meeting of the committee at the Commercial club. Mr. Whitney is the chairman of the executive committee, the other members of which are as follows: W. A. McDonagle, Stillman H. Bingham and Charles Mitchell.

"We are thoroughly in favor of the idea of seeing Minnesota first," said Capt. Whitney. "I also want to say that the Duluth convention of the State Editorial association will be the biggest and most enjoyable that has been held in the history of the Minnesota editors.

"We are coming here, not so much to learn of the mines, for we all know more or less of them, but to see the growing agricultural interests of the county, the immense steel plant in course of construction, and also to see some of the famous pleasure spots that are making Duluth famous.

"An investigation of the agricultural growth of St. Louis county will very likely be a revelation to most of the editors. The view of the steel plant will also be an object of interest to the visiting editors. The delegates to the convention will be real editors, and men who are interested vitally in the progress of the state. Therefore this trip will be one of special interest."

Capt. Whitney has been a member of the executive committee of the state editorial association for the past seventeen years. He has attended every convention that the association has held, and therefore his prediction regarding the coming Duluth convention speaks well for the interest that is being displayed by the editors.

The captain stated that there would probably be over 200 delegates here.

ROLLER SKATING and REFRESHMENTS

NO DETAILS OF HIS DEATH

Friends in Duluth Get No Further News From Mrs. Silvey.

No details have yet been received in Duluth of the manner in which William B. Silvey of Duluth met his death on the Titanic.

It is known here that he was drowned when the huge liner sank, but the manner in which he became separated from Mrs. Silvey has not been learned by his friends here.

Mrs. Silvey is still in New York and too ill to travel at the present time. She is overcome by the tragedy and will probably not leave for home before Monday or Tuesday. She has been too much overcome to talk of the parting with her husband and her friends here and in New York have not pressed her for details.

Mr. Silvey carried an accident insurance policy for $15,000 and life insurance which would bring the total up to nearly $60,000.

Mrs. Herbert F. Chaffee will reach Minneapolis Monday and will stop at the Hastings hotel. Mrs. Chaffee in an interview in New York stated that the last saw her husband when he pushed her into a boat and told her that it would be all right and she would be rowed back to him in a few minutes.

"No one had much thought of danger," she said. "I thought it a formality for the women to have to go, and remember laughing with my husband at the clumsy way everything was done. We had retired but were not asleep when the jar came at 11:45. It was not great, not more than a jerky stop. Mr. Chaffee put on the lights and then began to dress slowly.

"The woman opposite us, who had gone up to inquire, knocked on our door and told us the women and children were ordered into boats, but the officers said there was no danger. We took pains to put on warm things and got on deck in half an hour. All was confusion there and showed the lack of drilling.

"As we pulled steadily away, for the first time I understood the low purring sound. It was the water rushing into the Titanic's side, and my heart seemed to stop. The great vessel was perceptibly lowering in the water.

"I began then to feel a horrible fear, and tried to make out Mr. Chafee among the dark shadows against the rails.

"Lights were blazing behind them and boats dropping in front with a whirr of tackle. I never saw him again."

LOW BIDS ON CITY WORK

Low costs featured the bids which were opened by the board of public works yesterday for street improvements.

J. D. O'Connell was low on the grading and graveling of Ninth street from Seventh avenue east to Chester park. His bid was $3,324.50. The high bid was $7,132.

George R. King was low on the grading and graveling of Sixth avenue east between Fifth and Tenth streets. His bid was $4,159. The high bid was $6,620.

W. W. Clayton was low on the improvement of Third avenue east to Fifteenth street, thence to the Swan lake road and the sand pit. His bid was $2,644. The high bid was $5,389.

W. H. Kiltin was low on plank sidewalk for the entire city. His bid for the walks west of Twelfth avenue west was $4,976 and on the walks east of Twelfth avenue west it was $4,051. H. B. Raymond was a close second in both cases, being within $4.75 of Kiltin on the first and within $2.25 on the second.

W. H. Koltin was also low on cement walks west of Twelfth avenue west, bidding $13,684. D. H. Clough was low on cement walks east of Twelfth avenue west, bidding $17,362. He was also low on cement walks for Park Point. No bids were received for a small list of cement walks at Fond du Lac.

The contracts, aggregating close to $40,000 will probably be awarded to the low bids next Monday by the board, subject to the approval of the council.

JURY MAY DISAGREE

In all probability, the second jury in the Torrence larceny cases will disagree. Up to 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, and after having been out twenty-three hours, the jury had not reported. Neither did it return to the court for instructions.

Mrs. Eleanor Torrence was indicted by the March grand jury on two counts, each charging grand larceny, second degree. One of the indictments charged her with having stolen goods from Mrs. Clara Harris and the second accused her of stealing from Mrs. Lila W. Breckenridge.

The first trial, which resulted in a jury disagreement, started on March 20, and lasted until April 1. The second trial was not started until April 8. Much of the testimony in the second trial was a repetition of that offered in the first.

LAKE BOATS OBEYING LAW

"Passenger boats on the Great Lakes do not pretend to carry boats and rafts to accommodate all the passengers on board in case of an accident," said a marine man this morning. "After the investigation now going on as the result of the Titanic disaster, they will probably be forced to either cut down the number of passengers or increase the number of boats and rafts."

But few passenger boats are inspected at the port of Duluth. Only the boats of the Booth line, excursion steamers and ferry boats are inspected at this end of the lakes.

The steamer America, as an instance, is allowed to carry 450 passengers, but has room for but 108 people in the life boats and on the rafts. She complies with the law in every respect.

The law states that she be required to have 1,080 cubic feet of carrying capacity. This she is doing, but it is claimed that this gives room to but about 108 people.

The America carries a crew of 25. She is allowed 450 passengers. There are life preservers to the number of 478 on the boat, one for each one aboard, and three over. She has five life boats and two rafts, making up the amount of cubic carrying space required by law.

The law regarding the carrying of life boats and rafts, is claimed to be lax. All the boats live up to the law, but it is stated that the law is not stringent enough in insisting that sufficient boats and rafts be carried.

Inspect Steamer.

John Monaghan and M. F. Chalk, local vessel inspectors, inspected the steamer Ontario at the yards of the Superior Shipbuilding company this morning. The Ontario is a bulk freighter.

NATIONAL GUARD ANNOUNCEMENTS

St. Paul, Minn., April 20.—(Special to The Herald.)—Officers of the medical corps, Minnesota National Guard, will go to Lake City, June 3 for a six days' school of instruction under officers of the regular army. This announcement was made by Adjt Gen. F. B. Wood today. Army tactics, the war game and lectures will constitute the program.

The artillery officers probably will go to Fort Riley, Kan., July 6, for similar instruction and the Second and Third regiments are to take part in the maneuvers at Sparta, Wis., Aug. 6 to 15.

Maj. Thomas C. Clark of the medical corps of the Minnesota National Guard, assigned to the first infantry, has sent his resignation to Adjt. Gen. F. B. Wood declaring he no longer could give the time and attention to his post that its need required. He has been placed on the retired list.

Maj. Clark was major-surgeon of the Twelfth Minnesota volunteers and assistant to Maj. Griffith of the United States army in charge of the third division hospital at Chickamauga park in 1898. During the conflagration that devastated Beaudette and Spooner, Minn., last year, Maj. Clark aided in relief work.

Capt. Don F. Fitzgerald has been recommended for a major's commission in the medical corps to succeed Maj. Clark and to be assigned to the First infantry.

WAITING FOR LEVEL ROAD

Soo Line May Run Passenger Trains to Twin Cities July 1.

W. R. Callaway, general passenger agent for the Soo lines, who was in the city today, stated that through service to Winnipeg and service on the line from Minneapolis to Duluth will probably begin about July 1.

Mr. Callaway said that it is the intention of the company to hold back service on these two new lines until the road beds are in first-class shape. Trains could now be operated on the Minneapolis-Duluth line but the road bed is still rough and the company does not think it advisable to begin service until road bed is in perfect shape.

"It is quite possible that the service on the two lines will begin at the same time," said Mr. Callaway.

The Minneapolis man is a great booster for Duluth as a summer resort. He believes that this city will one day come into its own as a summer resort for the people of the South.

"Many of them want to come North, but they don't know where to go. We are going to tell them that Duluth is the most delightful city in the United States in the summer time and that to make the trip once and breathe the fresh air off Lake Superior will end in the trip being made an annual affair.

"I am looking forward to the time when there will be hundreds of summer cottages in Duluth and the Zenith City will be as widely known as Palm Beach or Atlantic City."

Railroad Personals.

Andy Thompson of the Erie and J. McKinnon, of the Canadian Northern, both traveling passenger agents and both of St. Paul are in the city today calling on local railroad men.

Dead Man Identified.

The dead man who was found in a ditch about nine miles from Dr. W. H. Magie's farm yesterday afternoon, was identified as Frank Deaken at the Durkan & Crawford undertaking rooms this afternoon. The body was brought into the city by Sheriff Meining and a post-mortem examination was held by Deputy Coroner Clark.

Deaken was about 55 years old and was well known in Duluth, having worked as a walter here for a number of years. He had been working as a walter in one of the logging camps, and it is thought he was on his way there when he died. The examination showed that the deceased had been drinking before his death, and it is believed that he lay down in the ditch to rest and died.

REAL ESTATE

BUSINESS IMPROVING, SAY REALTY DEALERS

"Moving Day" Will Bring Few Changes in Business District.

Not Much Desirable Residence Property for Rent May 1.

Realty dealers report business as steadily improving, and if fair weather continues, predict that there will be a marked impetus in both residence and business property trading from now on well into the summer.

May 1, "moving day" will find few changes in the down-town business district as far as leases are concerned. As far as can be learned no important transfers will be made at this time. In the residence districts, there will be the usual large number of changes.

Whitney Wall, a local building manager and real estate broker, declared today that the office buildings of the city were well filled, but that there was enough room and that there was no overcrowding. Mr. Wall said:

"Duluth has one advantage over New York city, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, in that she is not overbuilt with office structures. In New York city, a number of the large property holders are paying for the privilege of owning these big office buildings. New York is tremendously overbuilt. Any building manager cannot pay expenses if his building is half vacant the year around.

"In Duluth I look for new office buildings in the fall. There will be, especially if Duluth wins her big railroad rate case, when she will be crowded for room. The change will be a remarkable one when it does come, and it will surprise the wisest of us."

With regard to the available residence property for rent on May 1, Mr. Wall said: "It is next to impossible to secure a high class residence property for rent. About the only houses that can be rented are houses for workingmen or men of small means."

"The reason for this is obvious. The majority of the houses for rent in Duluth today are owned by outside investors, who do not realize that the houses are old, that people are demanding more modern conveniences, and usually they are unwilling to remodel a house to meet the demands of the tenant.

"It has only been within the past two years that the sober, industrious workingman with a little money saved or a good lot paid for, has been able to take advantage of opportunities offered him through the various building associations and erect a house with a small payment down and monthly installments which would not amount to any more than rent."

Mr. Wall reports a brisk business from his office for the past week. A 25-foot lot on East Second street near Fourteenth avenue east was sold for $1,200, a house and lot on Eighth street near Sixth avenue east was sold for $3,000, another house and lot on Eighth street near Twelfth avenue east went for $1,800 and two five-acre tracts near Woodland were sold for $80 an acre. Several lots in the new Homewood addition were also disposed of.

* * *

Acreage is holding its own and a number of attractive deals have been swung during the past week. An interesting transaction is reported from the office of Ebert, Walker & McKnight in the sale by that firm of the highly improved 160-acre farm owned by L. E. Smith of Wrenshall to M. Norris of Madison, Wis. The consideration was $8,000. On this farm over 100 acres have been cleared and the balance is pasture land. Mr. Norris, the purchaser, is a well-known breeder of high grade cattle and has already taken charge of the farm.

The same firm also sold to John Ross a twenty-acre tract close to the door farm. The purchaser will clear ten acres for crop this year and will also erect a building upon the place this spring.

* * *

D. M. Cole, general sales agent for the Duluth & Iron Range railroad land department, reports that during the past week five sales to people from Coleridge, Neb., were effected and looks for a great influx of settlers to Aitkin and St. Louis counties during the coming summer.

The Highland company this week sold two lots on the north side of Myrtle street between Teak and Ebony avenues to H. F. Oehlenschlager. The consideration was not given out.

* * *

Mary M. Steele this week sold to Margareta Sederberg for $2,000 a 100-foot frontage on the lower side of Dingwall street between Nineteenth and Twentieth avenues east.

* * *

The Lakeside Land company sold three lots during the week. John Maki purchased a property on Peabody street near Forty-second avenue east. Henry Koneczny bought a lot on Dodge street near Forty-third avenue east, and a property adjoining it was sold to John Lampkala.

* * *

A. C. Volk & Co. report the sale of five lots at Gary this week. Two sales were made to Murenco, Wis., purchasers, two to Hancock, Ill., people, and one to a Madison, Ill., man. Inquiry was never better than now, according to T. H. Jones, manager of the local office.

* * *

Tressa Schulenberg for $2,000 has sold to Peter Sharvey the northwest corner of Twenty-first avenue east and South street, fronting seventy feet on the avenue and fifty feet on South street.

* * *

A house and lot on the northwest corner of Fifth street and Fifth avenue west was this week sold to Marie C. Hansen by Charles Hanson for $1,900.

* * *

J. F. Nelson this week disposed of a house and 35-foot lot on the upper side of Sixth street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth avenues east to James R. Sutphin for $3,950.

HERALD'S POPULAR-PRICED HOMES

This design of a cement stucco bungalow is one of the most successful in this type of home. On the first floor is a large living room, dining room, kitchen, two chambers and a bathroom, all of which are very conveniently arranged. The broad elevation being placed toward the street, gives a generous home-like effect, which is emphasized by the well-protected entrance. The cost of this home in Duluth or vicinity would be about $4,000.

BUILDING SEASON HAS STARTED OFF BRISKLY

Many New Bungalows and Modern Frame Residences Are Planned.

The spring building season has started out briskly and local architects anticipate a splendid business in the residence districts. New bungalows and modern frame residences of the better class are planned by a number of lot owners who expect to improve their property this spring.

Architect P. M. Olson is preparing plans for a $6,000 two-story residence structure to be erected for Odin Halden, county auditor, at the southwest corner of Seventeenth avenue east and Fifth street.

The same architect is preparing plans for the following structures: Bungalow residence to be erected for S. Olson at Woodland park, cost $3,500; frame residence for J. D. McCulloch on Pitt street between Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth avenue east, cost $4,000; frame residence for Mrs. Pritchard on southwest corner of Forty-fifth avenue east and Robinson street, cost $4,500; bungalow residence for Elnar Larson at Lakeside, cost $3,000; two houses for the Lakeside Land company, one on Robinson street near Forty-fourth avenue east and the other on Fifty-fifth avenue east and Superior street, each costing about $3,000.

Architect Olson this week let the contract to the Alliance Real Estate corporation for the construction of a two-family frame house on the lower side of Fifth street between Seventeenth and Eighteenth avenue east. The building will cost $6,500 and will be constructed for A. A. Berne.

The Highland Land company expects to erect about six houses on Duluth Heights this coming summer. Contracts have already been let for the construction of two new concrete block houses on the corner of Myrtle street and Ebony avenue. It is understood that deals are now pending for the sale of these houses.

• • •

Achitect Vernon J. Price will have figures out next week calling for bids on the construction of a modern $10,000 store and flat building to be erected on the lower side of Fourth street between Fifth and Sixth avenues east. The new block will be put up for L. K. Dougherty and will be a distinct improvement to the neighborhood.

• • •

Austin Terryberry, a local architect, is preparing sketches for the remodeling and enlarging of the First Methodist church of Brainerd. It is proposed to enlarge the church building so a sto increase its seating capacity from 250 to 600. The plans will be out for figures within a few weeks.

• • •

Harry Raymond has been awarded the contract for the construction of a 5-room bungalow residence for Charles Beier on Fifty-seventh avenue west and Highland street by Ellerbe, Round & Sullivan, architects. The general contract was awarded for $6,000.

• • •

Dr. Mary McCoy has had D. V. Case & Broomhall, architects, prepare plans for a brick and stucco residence to be erected near the normal school. It will be equipped with hot water heat, vacuum cleaner, leaded and plate glass, etc., and will cost $6,000.

• • •

It is understood that the Anderson-Thoorsell block at the southeast corner of Twenty-first avenue west and Superior street will be remodeled so a sto carry two additional stories, F. G. German, a local architect, is preparing the plans. The work will cost about $18,000.

• • •

E. S. Radcliffe has prepared plans for the erection of a modern brick residence for E. M. Tredway. The new home will be 30 by 32, with oak and birch finish, maple floors, gas and electric fixtures and will cost about $10,000.

• • •

Architect J. J. Wangenstein has plans out for bids for the erection of a modern residence for Dr. E. G. Peterson to erected on Fifth street near Woodland avenue.

• • •

McLeod & Smith have received the contract from Architect F. G. German for the erection of a brick garage for the F. I. Salter company at Seventh avenue east and Superior street. The building will be 65 by 145 and will cost $13,000.

• • •

Twenty-six building permits representing an expenditure of $54,650 were taken out in Duluth this week, marking a notable gain over any week since the first of the year. A noteworthy feature of the building permits is that this week the largest permit calls for the erection of a $4,000 building.

• • •

Anderson & Gow, contractors, have been awarded the general contract for the erection of a $5,000 residence for William Brown at Eighteenth avenue east and Fourth street. The new home will be a two-story and basement affair, with hardwood floors and interior finish, hard wall plaster, hot water heat, plumbing, plate glass, tiling and electric wiring.

• • •

The Adams Athletic association of the West end is having Architect Abraham Hidstead prepare plans for the erection of a club house to cost $12,000 and to be built in the western end of the city. The plans call for a building 50 by 105, two-story and large basement containing swimming pool, shower baths, locker rooms, running track and other gymnasium features. The second floor will be devoted to club rooms and library.

• • •

Totals from seventy-three cities of the country on March building permits show a slight gain over a year ago and indications the country over are said to be rather encouraging as far as spring building is concerned. During the month just closed, permits were taken out in seventy-three cities for the construction of buildings representing an expenditure of $73,262,319 as compared with $69,160,389 a year ago. This shows a gain of 6 per cent. In Duluth, however, March this year showed a falling off as compared with March, 1911. During the past month building permits totaled $114,125 as compared with $264,550 for March, 1911, a loss of 57 per cent.

WHEAT HAS A NEW BULGE

Highest Figures of Friday Look Low Compared With New Mark.

Day Is Exceptionally Bullish —Duluth Flaxseed Also Boosted.

Duluth Board of Trade, April 20.—The boom figures that wheat made last fall after the defeat of the proposed Canadian reciprocity treaty were cast quite into the shade by the closing prices of today. The highest price the cash No. 1 northern on the Duluth market made last fall was $1.12⅛, the closing price on Oct. 21. But this same grade of cash wheat today closed at $1.14¼. Duluth May wheat today closed at 1¾c over the closing price of yesterday, which was itself considered a remarkably high figure. There were also big gains at Chicago, Minneapolis and Winnipeg.

It seems to be the general opinion that wheat is up to stay up for a while. The reports of destruction of winter wheat east of the Missouri river have been a tremendously bullish factor. Moreover, today the primary wheat receipts showed a large falling off, compared with those of a year ago. There did not seem to be a ray of hope on the horizon for the bears.

For many weeks people have been prone to expect that the liquidation of May wheat would cause quite a decline in the price of wheat on the North American markets during the latter part of April, but few, if any, have this opinion now. Holders of May options, who did not care to accept delivery, have been liquidating them without any trouble and without disturbing the market. This liquidation is about completed now.

The good wheat prospects in the Northwest, as far as there any prospects at all at this early time of the year, are about all that the bears can now put forward as a reason for believing that prices will be lower. Most brokers, however, believe wheat will go still higher before it makes any considerable downward move, for the spring wheat harvest is a long way off, and many are the factors that can ruin that crop between now and the harvest time.

The cables that were received from Europe were without exception higher. Argentina, also, sent bullish news. Wheat on the Buenos Ayres market last night closed at an advance of ⅝c and opened this morning at a further advance of ⅛c. Liverpool wheat closed ¾d to 1¼d higher. It was bulled by the news from America and Argentina; by the closing of the Dardanelles, cutting off Russian shipments via the Black sea, and by unfavorable weather reports from India. The same factors affected all the wheat markets of Europe.

Dull Trade in Flaxseed.

There was very little business on the Duluth flaxseed market this morning. Offers were very light. This together with higher foreign quotations had the effect of boosting the price on the Duluth market. Duluth May flax closed 1c higher and July 1½c higher. Winnipeg May flaxseed closed last night at $1.74⅝, being 2c off, but this morning it opened at an advance of 2⅜c. London Calcutta closed ⅞c lower today for both the April and June options, at $2.16.

Coming north from Chillicothe, the wheat is not so good. Still there is a lot of fine wheat with about 25 per cent abandoned. I think the state will raise about half a crop under favorable conditions."

T. W. Lewis wired from Belleville, Kan.: "Bottom lands of the Kaw along the Rock Island to Manhattan have some good wheat. The total acreage is only about 100,000, however. I saw several farmers dragging fields to break the top cover. The general condition is unpromising and I believe the condition of this section of Kansas is low than it was a month ago. The season is three weeks late."

L. E. Brown, grain broker of Minneapolis, who was a visitor on the Duluth Board of Trade today, said: "I do not look for any immediate decline in wheat. On the contrary I expect to see it go still higher. We cannot look to the liquidation of May options to bear the market, for those who wished to get rid of these options and were afraid to accept delivery, have for the most part, already disposed of them. The condition of the soft winter wheat is such that wheat must stay pretty high for some time. To be sure there are good prospects in the Northwest. The ground is in excellent condition. Yet, there was not the usual amount of fall plowing, on account of the early winter, and I think the acreage of wheat will be reduced."

CHICAGO MARKET.

Kansas Crop Statements Put Wheat Bears Into an Early Flight.

Chicago, April 20.—Statements that wheat in eastern Kansas showed a condition of 75 per cent against 90 early in the month put bears today on the run. Through Riley, Clay, Cloud and Republic counties, the average, it was said, appeared decidedly below normal. Although the ground seemed full of moisture, there was a dry top crust, which was hurting the late small plants. The market was also helped by reports from Liverpool telling of free bidding there for cargoes. Opening prices were ⅛c to 1½c to 1⅝c, the latter for September. July started at $1.09¼ to $1.09½, a gain of ¾c to 1c and rose to $1.09⅝@1.09¾.

After a little further upturn, profit-taking on the part of longs led to a reaction. Rain in Kansas and Nebraska counted on the bear side. The close, however, was firm, with July 1¼@1⅜c net higher at $1.09¾@1.09⅞.

Brisk demand with offerings limited brought about an advance in corn. Shorts were the chief buyers. Buenos Ayres sent word that freight room was scarce. July opened ⅛@⅜c to ¾@½c up at 76¾c to 77c, and for a considerable time held within those limits.

Some additional gain was scored, but selling out by owners timid about carrying holdings over Sunday eased the market. The close was steady at 76⅝c for July, a net advance of a shade.

Oats mounted with other grain. Prospects that delay to seeding would result in corn being planted to a large extent instead of oats formed a source of strength. July started ⅛c to ⅜c higher at 54⅜c to 54⅝c and sold up to 54¾c.

A heavier run of hogs here and west weighed down provisions. Initial transactions were 2½c to 12½c lower, with September delivery $18.70 for pork, $10.52½ to $10.55 for lard and $10.30 for ribs.

WEAKNESS IN SPECIALTIES

International Mercantile Marine Touches Lowest Point of Week.

Sharp Decline in Marconi Old Stock—Market Closes Steady.

New York, April 20.—A mixture of gains and losses, the latter predominating, marked the opening dealings in today's stock market. Bethlehem Steel common and preferred declined 1 and 2 points respectively with fractional losses elsewhere. The local traction stocks were strong with an advance of 1¼ points in Interborough Metropolitan preferred and 4 points in Third Avenue. Elsewhere changes were nominal with dealings moderate.

Trading during the first hour was insignificant. Some slight strength in the general list was offset by weakness in the specialties, including the issues of the International Mercantile Marine company which went to lowest prices of the movement while Bethlehem Steel stocks lost some more of yesterday's gain. Later on all of the active shares gave way fractionally under yesterday's closing.

The market closed steady. Bidding for American Can, Central Leather, Pittsburg Coal and American Linseed stocks checked the dropping tendency of the standard stocks, and the whole list advanced to best figures of the morning. International Mercantile Marine, preferred stocks, and bonds sold at the lowest price of the week, touching 19⅛ and 63 respectively. Marconi old stock sold down to 170, a decline of 180 points from yesterday's high.

COPPERS CHANGE VERY LITTLE

Red Metal Stocks Are Inactive But Maintain Their Level of Values.

Copper stocks were dull and listless today and changed very little. There was not much trading. Few seemed to care to buy or sell. The dullness of the New York general stock market affected the coppers, but unlike the general stock market, the copper shares in general showed no weakness. Amalgamated and North Butte closed a little off, but there were others that showed gains. Among these were Giroux, Vermilion, Red Warrior, Carmen and North American.

* * *

Gray & Sturgis today received the following closing copper letter from Hall at Boston: "The Titanic disaster is the principal topic in all brokerage offices and the fluctuations in leading stocks for the day were insignificant. Locally the non-producers were the most active, Indiana selling above 21, North Lake, 8⅝, and Algomah, 8. There was some profit-taking in the recent active issues, such as Tamarack and Granby, but as a whole the market acted very well, the news of the day being unimportant."

ILLEGALLY ORGANIZED

Town of Buyck Attacks Its Own Legal Existence.

Says Incorporation Was Secured for a Fraudulent Purpose.

In defending a lawsuit in district court, the Town of Buyck, St. Louis county, is attacking its own legal existence.

The action was brought by Charles H. Strawbridge of Chicago to enforce the payment of a bond issue, five years overdue.

The town of Buyck, in answer, asserts that the township was illegally organized, that its first town election was a fraud and that its first set of officers conspired against the taxpayers by issuing $22,000 worth of bonds to finance a private road under the guise of a public improvement.

If the contentions of the defendant hold, and the town of Buyck wins its case, the court may be obliged to find that the town of Buyck never had any legal existence or authority to issue bonds.

The lawsuit revives interesting history of the so-called illegal and fraudulent organization of the town of Buyck. In refusing to redeem the road bonds, the township officials in answer to the suit, alleged that it is not a valid obligation.

Charles Buyck, W. A. James, the Commercial Investment company, original purchasers of the bond issue, and the John Nuveen Company of Chicago, which later purchased the bonds from their agents, the Commercial Investment company, are named as conspirators in the fraudulent organization of the town.

The answer sets out that a short time prior to the issuance of the bonds in 1906 the so-called conspirators for the purpose of defrauding the taxpayers and residents of the territory now known as the town of Buyck caused a petition to be presented to the county board for the incorporation of the town of Buyck.

It is claimed by the defendant town that the territory did not at that time have twenty-five bona fide residents and voters and that none who signed the petition, except six, were residents or legal voters and that some were not even citizens of the United States.

On Sept. 7, 1906, the answer states, the county board acted upon the petition, presumably deceived, it is claimed by the "false, fraudulent and perjured" representations legalized the town.

Sham Election.

The answer then recites that a fraudulent town meeting was held and that a sham election took place, at which Buyck and James were appointed as treasurer and clerk. It is claimed that James was a resident and voter at Minneapolis at that time.

The first town board, consisting of James and Buyck issued $22,000 worth of bonds, which were taken over by the Commercial Investment company, and which were later transferred to the John Nuveen company of Chicago and from them turned over to Charles H. Strawbridge, the plaintiff.

The answer claims that Buyck and James in furtherance of their conspiracy used the money obtained from the sale of the bonds in financing a private road for themselves, a road which "is not and never has been a town road," and which the present town officials claim will never be of any benefit to the town.

The defendant asks the court to make the Commercial Investment company, the John Nuveen company, Buyck and James parties to the action, so that in case the bonds are held to be enforceable, the town can recover $22,000 from the so-called original conspirators.

The town of Buyck, however, has been operating as a legal township for the past six years. It has collected taxes and has in its treasury more than $20,000. It is understood that money has been collected from the taxpayers for the express purpose of paying the interest on the bond issue, but that at a recent town meeting, by a vote of 16 to 15, it was decided not to pay the bonds but to fight the matter in the courts.

The town of Buyck is located north of Vermilion lake. John Heitman is attorney for the town officers and Charles E. Adams is attorney for Strawbridge in the litigation.

COPPERS

The stock market situation gets in a more satisfactory condition every day. Individual stocks are getting into better technical position, and the out-of-town buying is cleaning up the offerings at each successive level.

The week has been characterized by heavy demand for RED WARRIOR, CALUMET & SONORA, KEATING, SCOTT, SAVANNA, and CALUMET & MONTANA and CALUMET & CORBIN. These stocks are being bought by people who are laying them away for materially higher prices. At the moment we are particularly friendly to Red Warrior, and believe that it will show the greatest advance of any stock on the board, on account of the extremely favorable developments at the property. The late news from the RED WARRIOR mine is most excellent. A copy of the Milford Newspaper received today states that great excitement has been caused in the town by reason of the remarkable richness of the Red Warrior ore which is being shipped from there to Salt Lake.

There is no question about this being a bull market, and that all stocks will sell for a great deal higher price than they are now selling at. We believe we are in a great period of business prosperity. To us it looks as if the next two years will be the best the country has ever seen. We look to see the best stocks selling materially higher.

On account of the developments at the properties, we regard all of the above stocks with favor.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF TRADE

New York, April 20. — R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade today says: Reports from the leading trade centers indicate that the recent progress toward increased business confidence and activity continues, and no counter development, however disturbing, seems to check the improvement. The growth of a more optimistic business sentiment is conspicuous in the West and Southwest, significant because of the reports of damage of winter wheat, which were responsible for a rapid advance in prices later partialy lost. The fearful disaster to the steamship Titanic has had a more or less depressing effect upon the markets and is a matter of special concern in shipping and insurance circles.

Further price advances in iron and steel are announced, and production is well maintained at approximately 90 per cent of capacity. There has been heavy buying of bars by agricultural machinery interests and markets are higher. Sheets are also firmer, and on the whole finished and semi-finished lines are stronger. Demand for pig iron has included basic, malleable and foundry grades, important foundries in the East and Central West having covered their requirements for the third quarter and some for the second half of the year. There is less structural steel work in sight than for some time, but it is estimated that contracts for standard section rails now pending aggregate about $100,000.

Labor troubles in textile centers are adjusted, but deliveries in many lines are affected by recent strikes. Distributors in the Middle West complain of hesitancy due to unfavorable crop reports. In the industrial sections of the country drygoods trade is improving moderately. Cotton goods are firm and advances have been announced in wide print cloths, wide sheetings, and other lines. Demand for staple prints and ginghams is steady and ducks rule very firm.

Export shipments continue large. The silk trade is beginning to show distinct improvement in the volume of fall orders, while woolen and worsted lines are in very satisfactory position.

Improvement is noted in footwear, and while the higher prices demanded cause conservative buying, both manufacturers and wholesalers report an increase in business as the season advances. Leather and hides are firm.

To the Stockholders of Butte and Superior Copper Co., Limited.

You have already been informed regarding the plans of the management with reference to equipping the properties of your company with a mill of a capacity of 500 tons of ore per day. The work of construction has been prosecuted diligently and during this period the developments in the mine have disclosed ore reserves of such magnitude and extent that your engineers have united in the recommendation that the capacity of the mill be increased to 1,000 tons of ore per day and that the mine be equipped to meet these requirements. The additional savings and economies that may be introduced by operating on the larger basis above stated fully justify the additional expenditures necessary to accomplish it. Your board has therefore unanimously recommended the sale of an additional 30,000 shares of stock. This stock will be offered for subscription pro rata to all stockholders of record at the close of business on April 27, 1912, and in view of the fact that the company has outstanding convertible bonds which the holders may elect to convert into stock prior to that time, the exact basis of apportionment cannot now be stated. Stockholders of record on said 27th day of April, 1912, will have the right to subscribe up to and including May 15th, 1912, at $27.50 per share, payment in full for the stock to accompany the subscription, which must be made on or prior to the said May 15th. Immediately after the closing of the books on April 27th subscription warrants will be forwarded to all shareholders covering their right to subscribe and containing full directions as to remittances. The entire issue of 30,000 shares has been underwritten at the price stated by Messrs. Hayden, Stone & Company.
